PANAMA CANAL BILL PASSES; GOES TO TAFT

House Enacts Measure as It Went Through Senate, With Free Toll Provision.

BENEFITS AMERICAN SHIPS

Doubt as to the Attitude of the President Toward the Measure.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—Passed by the House without a recorded negative vote, the Panama Canal tolls bill was rushed tonight to President Taft, the Senate having previously adopted the conference report passing the bill.

Chairman Adamson of the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which framed the bill, is uncertain as to the President's position concerning the bill. No one knows what the President will do with it. At the White House it was stated that it would probably not be considered tonight.

Representative Moore of Philadelphia made a vigorous attack on the bill, in behalf of the ship builders, threatening several sections with points of order.

To prevent the shooting to pieces of the bill, the rules committee rushed through the House a special rule providing that no section of the bill should be subject to a point of order and that debate on it should be restricted. Moore made an unsuccessful effort to have the bill recommitted with instructions to the conferees to cut out the free material provision. In this attack on the bill, Moore held that it would result in heavy loss to ship builders and consequent loss to mechanics and workingmen generally.

"No Tribute to Shipping Trust."

"We are not building tow in ship yards ships for the foreign trade," replied Chairman Alexander, of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. "We have not a million tons in ships in the foreign trade. Our ship yards build for the coastwise trade only, and this we have not disturbed. We do not bother in building our merchant marine by paying tribute to the shipping trust. To protect our ships I got the conferees to put in this bill the Payne duty of 50 per cent. ad valorem on foreign vessels engaged in the foreign trade. I am willing that American ship yards shall have a monopoly on the construction of coastwise vessels. It was testified before our committee that it was 40 per cent. more to build ships in American yards than in English yards. I am a friend of American ship yards. I want them kept busy building ships for our merchant marine."

Representative Stevens, one of the House conferees who did not join with his colleagues in approval of the conference report, declared that the section extending the anti-trust law was foolish and unenforceable. This section was added by the Senate, and prohibits use of the canal by ships charged with being in a trust.

"The ship owners of the Atlantic and Pacific coasts demanded special privileges," said Stevens." Had they kept their hands off, these amendments would not have been made to the toll. The authorities of the canal agreed that the administration features of the bill are excellent.

"I disagree with the railroad section of the bill. I think we violate our treaties with Great Britain and Canada, which declare against discrimination. The Canadian Pacific, Canadian Northern and Canadian Grand Trunk railroads have water carriers competing among themselves. By this section, railroad-owned ships of destroying competition, there will be discrimination against the Canadian ships lines."

Republican Leader Mann upheld the right of this country to pass the bill in its present shape. "I am sensitive on the question of our national honor," he observed. "But I don't think there is reflection on our honor in the provision of free tolls for American coastwise ships. The canal, with the additional cost for the army and navy, will cost the government fifty millions a year. To say that we should place ourselves under this obligation without some special benefits to our people, would write us down as fools. I hope to see the genius who built that canal, Colonel Goethals, rewarded by the Congress and made a general in the army.

A general defense of the bill was made by Representative Covington of Maryland, who claimed that this government at its formation had declared that commerce should be free throughout the Union, and that the Panama canal, being on American land, was a link in the coastwise trade channels of this government.

THRILLING RESCUE OF YACHTING PARTY

Five Men Who Leaped from Burning Craft Are Saved from Drowning.

THOUSANDS SEE FLAMES

Searchlight of Portland Steamer Aids in Brave Work Off Graves Light.

Five men were rescued from drowning after they had leaped from a twenty-two-foot burning auxiliary yacht in the water early last night, between Graves Lighthouse and Deer Island. The rescues were made under thrilling and unusually spectacular circumstances, while the Portland steamer, Ransom B. Fuller, played its searchlight over the scene so that the five men struggling in the water could be located.

Thousands See Flames.

Thousands of Summer visitors on the North and South Shores watched the yacht, from which the men had been forced to jump for their lives, burn to the water's edge. The men, thoroughly exhausted, were rescued. All five were employed at the Charlestown Navy Yard.

There were two reports of the rescues. One was that the men had been taken aboard a launch by soldiers from Fort Strong and treated at the fort. Another version was that the steamer Ransom B. Fuller, seeing rockets sent into the air, had stood by and lowered two lifeskiffs into which the five men were carried aboard the steamer and taken to Portland.

A dozen or more smaller craft came up while the yacht was burning, and remained nearly until the boat had been completely burned.

The power boat in which they were sailing burned for more than an hour. The spectacle of the flames leaping into the air attracted crowds on the waterfront at Winthrop, Revere Beach, Nahant, Hull, Nantasket and other points. Hundreds gathered on Great Head, Winthrop, and there, like the many thousands along the beaches, were thrilled at the sight several miles distant over the bay.

The figures of the five men could be plainly seen in the bright glare of the flames soon after the fire got started well under way. Apparently there had been an explosion, perhaps resulting from a match accidentally thrown into oil or gasoline. Thousands gathered with horror as the flames ate the length of the twenty-two-foot auxiliary sloop, and the men had been compelled to jump for their lives, one by one, into the water.

Steamer Aids Work.

The plight of the sloop and its occupants was seen at Fort Strong. But more assistance came from the Ransom B. Fuller, which moved close up to the flaming craft and played its searchlight over the water while small boats picked up each of the exhausted men. The fire and the steamer with its searchlight kept the throngs on the beaches interested for an hour or more.

According to the story told the police, the five men had left the Navy Yard, heading down the harbor. The sloop caught fire after passing Deer Island. Luckily the craft was directly in the path of the Ransom B. Fuller, which stood by until the sloop's occupants had been saved.

HARTIGAN'S BODY FOUND.

WEDDING BELLS END CHASE OF ELOPERS

Girl's Father Pursues Her and Roxbury Youth from Newport to Boston.

MEETS PAIR ON STREET

Forgives and Consents That She Become Mrs. Caplan; Bride Only 18.

After pursuing his eighteen-year-old daughter, Frances Ethel, and Michael A. Caplan of Roxbury, from Newport to Fall River and then to Boston, where he encountered the couple on Summer street, Jacob Aronson, a wealthy Newport leather dealer, has consented to the marriage of the young sweethearts. The father accompanied the pair to the Boston marriage registry and gave the parental authority necessary before the first papers in an application for marriage could be made out.

Mrs. Benjamin Caplan of No. 97 Hampden street, Roxbury, learned last night for the first time that her son had filed application for a marriage license. She was distressed that she had not been taken into his confidence.

Michael A. Caplan, twenty-two years old, is civil engineer at the United States Naval Station, Newport. In that city he met Frances, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Aronson.

Father Takes the Trail.

Friday the couple came to Boston. Miss Aronson's departure was discovered by her parents. Her father, accompanied by his lawyer, took up the trail and finally traced the couple to this city.

Hurrying up Summer street from the South Station, Mr. Aronson and his counsel ran plump into Miss Aronson and Caplan, who were going to the City Hall branch at No. 100 on that street, where the Bureau of Births, Deaths and Marriages is located.

Mr. Aronson demanded that his daughter come home. The girl flatly refused. Mr. Aronson made the best of it and accompanied them to the marriage bureau.

The papers were issued and then the couple sought legal permission for a marriage without waiting for the five-day limit to expire.

Judge Issues Permit.

Judge A. Nathan Williams of Roxbury District Court, gave permission for the marriage. The last heard of the party, they were seeking some one to perform the ceremony.

Mrs. Benjamin Caplan, mother of Michael, said last night:

"Why, I can't believe my boy is married. Why didn't he tell his mother about it. He had told me about a beautiful girl he had met in Newport but I did not know her name was Aronson."

Miss Minnie Caplan, Michael's twenty-year old sister, was also indignant.

"I never thought Michael would marry without telling me," she said, "we were like pals and I don't understand it. He did use to talk a lot about a Newport girl, but I don't remember her name."

T. R. Explains Away Perkins Opens Fight in Bay State Cheered by Boston Throngs

Moving pictures of Roosevelt! A moving picture machine doesn't travel any faster than the Expressions of Theodore Roosevelt. The Camera Man caught him in action at Point of Pines yesterday.

PERKINS OFFERED MILLIONS FOR HIS CHILDREN'S SAKE

Ex. President Speaks at Point of Pines and on the Common; Appeals Both to Men and Women to Get on Progressive Band Wagon: Flays Bosses

COLONEL THEODORE ROOSEVELT explained last night to a crowd of 12,000 on Boston Common why George W. Perkins of New York, the Steel Trust magnate, and William Flinn, the Pennsylvania boss and millionaire, are with him and the Progressive party.

It was the one question that everybody wanted answered, and an unknown man in the darkness and the multitude voiced the curiosity of the whole country when he interrupted the Colonel's set speech and cried:

"How about Perkins?"

Roosevelt paused, hesitated, waved his hand and shouted: "I will tell you about Perkins!"

And the tremendous audience stood spellbound as Roosevelt quoted George W. Perkins in the most remarkable statement ever made by an American millionaire.

"I'LL TELL YOU ABOUT PERKINS."

"I will tell you about Perkins," said the Colonel. "He is a very wealthy man. I was surprised myself when he told me he was with me in this Progressive movement. I have known him for fourteen years. I knew that he was engaged in big business and that he was connected with the Steel Trust.

"I frankly went to him and said: 'Why do you interest yourself in these doctrines?'

"He replied: 'Because I have children. Things are coming to such a pass in this country that some better understanding between the people and big business is absolutely necessary. If things go on like this America will not be a safe place to live in by the time the children of our day are grown to manhood.

"'We have got to have impartial justice, and the government must get into a better position with regard to big business than it is at present or there will be troublous times. Your movement, I believe, carries the remedy, and I believe you to be the only public man of today who can bring better times about.'

"I told Mr. Perkins that if we should win I would insist that all trusts should be regulated, and that included the Steel Trust. Mr. Perkins said 'I agree with you. In government regulation is the solution of the difficulty. I believe we should have regulation of all big business.'

"I should be a small, mean man if I refused the support of a man who made such a remarkable declaration of progressive principles because he happened to be wealthy.

"Mr. William Flinn of Pennsylvania is another very wealthy man who is supporting the Progressive party. He is supporting it with a full knowledge of our principles and intentions. He approves of them. I am glad to have his support."

A DAY OF SENSATIONS

It was a day of sensations. The ex-President made four speeches before four extraordinary audiences. One was a crowd of 6,000 people, of whom one-third were women, at the Point of Pines in the afternoon. The second was at a French-Canadian picnic at Oak Island, where 1,200 people acclaimed him as the next President. The third was at a banquet of very unusual character at the Point of Pines, where the Progressive party was officially launched, and the fourth was an address to 12,000 people from the bandstand on Boston Common.

At the Point of Pines banquet Roosevelt became confidential. He was talking about his zeal for peace and for order. "I practice what I preach," he said. "I shall tell you something I have never told before—what I actually intended to do during the great anthracite strike of ten years ago.

"The country was suffering intensely from a coal famine. The mine operators refused to yield and so did the strikers. I tried to bring them together and the operators refused all overtures.

"I arranged with the Governor of Pennsylvania that he should call on the aid of United States troops to suppress rioting. So far the operators were with me. But my instructions to General Schofield, in case the United States troops entered the mining region, were that he should seize the mines and act as a receiver for them, with or without the consent of the operators. He would have reopened the mines and operated them under United States State martial law.

"It was not necessary to do this, because the operators got wind of the scheme and came to terms. It was a time for firm measures."

The acknowledgment that Roosevelt had intended to actually seize the coal mines brought out tremendous cheering from the banqueters.

CLEVELAND WAS TO ACT.

"I had secured the consent of ex-President Cleveland, with others, to serve on a commission in case we had operated the mines against the wishes of the mine owners," added Colonel Roosevelt.

"I don't like extreme action, but I never hesitate to take any action that is necessary. The mine owners objected to serving with a labor man on a commission to adjust things, or I appointed a labor man as a sociologist, in direct interference with his efficiency in the least to be called a sociologist, although he was president of the Railway Conductors' Union.

"As to the Navy, I am in favor of a steady program of two battleships a year until such time as an international agreement for reduction of armament can be arrived at. I love peace, but I believe in the peace of the trong man armed."

There were some of the most remarkable statements from the four speeches of yesterday.

At the Point of Pines Colonel Roosevelt indicated that he regards President Taft as out of the running in the presidential race. When he attacked Governor Wilson for the criticism of the third party platform, the Colonel was asked by one of the crowd:

"Is how about President Taft?"

Roosevelt looked quizzically at his interrogator, and in a highly pitched voice chirped:

"I am not discuss dead issues."

The crowd let out a whoop of approval, while Mr. Roosevelt smiled broadly.

The Progressive candidate's extraordinary pow ers were taxed to the utmost, and his voice sqeaked as he poured forth it relentlessly upon the Commoner.

The most ardent enthusiasm greeted and encouraged him, and he declared himself completely refreshed. He was ever thankful Massachusetts would be in the van of the new movement.

250 Women at the Banquet.

In Massachusetts' political history nothing quite like the Progressive banquet at the Point of Pines has ever been seen, for here for the first time women took an equal part with men in a presidential rally.

One thousand people sat down to the dinner, and fully 250 of these were women and girls.

The character of the gathering amazed all political observers, for both men and women were of the very best class. The typical politician wasn't there at all, and in their places were enthusiasts of both sexes.

Some of the women were active Suffragists, but more were wives and daughters of the Progressives; and it probably was the first time that men took their families to a beach political powwow.

The enthusiasm for Roosevelt at this banquet was amazing, and the shrill blandite of the women mingled strangely with the deep cheers of the men.

Familiarity was much prominent also at the outdoor rally of the afternoon. Fully one-third of the audience of 6,000 people were women, and they were stylish, attractive and vociferously sympathetic. Hundreds of them were adorned with red bandanas handkerchiefs, and hundreds more carried banners and badges of the Bull Moose.

At 7:45 two thousand people, including many women, were massed in front of the Parkman bandstand on the Common, between the pavilion and Soldiers' Hill.

The new $50,000 pavilion, a memorial to George F. Parkman, and considered one of the most beautiful structures of the kind in the world, was used last night

T. R. HITS SENATORS FROM NEW ENGLAND FOR AIDING LORIMER

To steal a nomination or to steal an election is even worse than to steal a purse, for it is a theft of the people's rights, it is a theft from the people as a whole.

It is a bad thing to win a Senatorship by such methods as Mr. Lorimer employed, but it is not one whit worse than to steal a nomination for the presidency by such methods as were employed by the bosses who controlled the Republican nomination at Chicago.—From Roosevelt's speech at the Point of Pines.

for the first time as a political rostrum, and the first time at night for any purpose.

The Common was policed as though the candidate were a real Bull Moose and the audience so many Maine hunters in an open season.

150 Police on Guard.

There was a circle of about 150 police posted all around the broad platform surrounding the pavilion proper. The speaker was literally ringed with brass buttons, blue uniforms and gray helmets. The police arrangements were in charge of Captain Carney of Lagrange street.

Another big squad of policemen was gathered at the corner by the baseball grounds, ready to move about through the crowd. Sergeant Hickey and a squad of plain-clothes men were on duty.

"Men and women of Massachusetts," Roosevelt began, in his Point of Pines speech. At this there were loud and prolonged cheers, the women doing most of the cheering. This, however, lasted hardly more than a minute, and the Bull Moose leader quickly began his denunciation of the Republican bosses.

"To steal a nomination or to steal an election is even worse than to steal a purse," declared Roosevelt.

"It is a bad thing to win a senatorship by such methods as Mr. Lorimer employed," he went on. "But it is not one whit worse than to steal a nomination for the presidency by such methods as were employed by the bosses who controlled the Republican convention at Chicago last June.

"Certain of your New England Senators, I regret to say, took the lead, both in conducting the campaign for the defense of Mr. Lorimer and in putting through the steal of the Republican nomination at Chicago."

Roosevelt replied to Governor Wilson's criticism of the Progressive platform, that it required a Sabbath Day's journey to drive through it." The Colonel accused Governor Wilson of not having taken the trouble to find out the meaning of the Bull Moose platform.

Mimic the Bull Moose.

As the Colonel spoke, many in the crowd gave vociferous imitations of a bull moose. At times it seemed as if Roosevelt himself were the most zealous cheer leader in the throng, as he would wave his arms, and the applause would follow.

Once after mentioning Senator Root and Senator Gallinger as among those who led in the defence of Lorimer, Roosevelt remarked in a low tone:

"My, but they're a fine body of men."

One of the diversions was when the Colonel picked out a G. A. R. man in the crowd.

"You wear a civil war button," remarked the Bull Moose leader.

Instantly veterans came into evidence here and there in the throng. As he saw them, Roosevelt singled out each, and then made a remark about the similarity of the present time to conditions at the time of the civil war.

Meets Steam Roller.

The Colonel's speeches followed an eventful day. On his motor trip from Providence yesterday morning, the Bull Moose leader met a gigantic steam roller in Dedham. On seeing the machine, one of the Bull Moose leaders remarked, accompanying the Colonel yelled out:

"Look out there, Colonel, here comes the G. O. P."

"Haw-haw," laughed Roosevelt.

"I've met steam rollers and survived 'em," he reiterated.

But the Colonel's chauffeur swung the automobile over to one side of the road and gave the roller a wide berth. As he passed Roosevelt looked at it hard, felt his arm and waved it at the engineer on the steam roller. The latter snatched off his cap and waved it back.

"Sure thing that the engineer wasn't Puny Placer," remarked one of the Rhode Island Progressives.

Arriving at Roosevelt was driven to the home of Dr. George Sturgis Higelow, on Beacon street. A number of Bull Moose leaders were present, for consultation and luncheon, among them being James H. Maguire, Thomas L. Doherty, Matthew Hale, the Colonel's Bay State manager; former District Attorney Arthur Dehon Hill, Councillor Ernest Smith, Councillor Ernest Smith, Lawrence G. Brooks, H. C. Watson and the members of the Rhode Island Progressive League, who had escorted Roosevelt to Boston.

After the luncheon Roosevelt took his motor at 2:30 in five autos, the Colonel blazing the way, through Charlestown, to Point of Pines, and then to Chelsea, where he was given an ovation along the streets; up to the Soldiers' Home, where the gaily bedecked, pleasure seekers run up in thousands and hurrahed for the Colonel, and finally reaching Point of Pines about 4, a few minutes Roosevelt conferred with the Massachusetts leaders in Pratt Hall.

Shortly after the Colonel's arrival the Beverly Roosevelt Club, 125 strong, marched up from Beverly Farms, cheering and flying an emblem which bore the words:

"We love our Beverly, but, oh, you Oyster Bay."

At 6 o'clock the Waltham Watch Band struck up "Hail to the Chief." Unannounced, Roosevelt walked to the veranda. His speech took up an hour and a quarter.

Home for Sunday.

Leaving the Point of Pines, Roosevelt went to Oak Island to speak at a picnic. He returned to Fenke's Hotel at 6 o'clock, where a banquet was served which he was the guest and Matthew Hale was toastmaster. Edward F. Wallace welcomed the Colonel himself spoke, followed by Charles Bass of New Hampshire followed. The colonel himself spoke, followed by Charles B. Bird of Walpole, Frederic Fosdick of Pittsburg, Mrs. Susan N. Fitzgerald of Boston and Arthur Leon Hall.

After the banquet, the Colonel motored to Boston and spoke on the Common. After a visit to Hyde Park, he left on the midnight train for Oyster Bay. His wife spend today at home and tomorrow he will decide on plans for his campaign in Vermont. It is likely he will be mingling that State about the same time Governor Foss is speaking in the Green Mountains for Governor Wilson.

Colonel Roosevelt at Point of Pines said:

"Men and Women of Massachusetts—

"In making my speech here in Massachusetts on behalf of the Progressive party I wish to emphasize the fact that we are absolutely clear from affiliation with either of the old parties, that we regard both the old parties' machines as hopelessly corrupt and incompetent, and that we appeal to the rank and file of both the old parties equally to stand with us for good citizenship in the spirit of true Americanism. Ex-Democrats and ex-Republicans alike, we hope will share with us the task of building up the Progressive party, and we invite into our ranks men and women without regard to their past party affiliations, to their creed, their birthplace or the color of their skin.

"Ours is a movement of genuine progress; we who at the moment lead it are endeavoring right to make the world safed to us, and according to the light that is given us, to represent the hopes, the desires, the high enthusiasm, the earnest men and women of this country, whose purpose is to overthrow the wrong that sits in high places and to bring nearer the day when justice shall be done alike to great and small throughout the land.

Scores Election Frauds.

"The first essential in securing the right of the people to rule is to secure the unsparing condemnation of dishonesty in nominations and elections. To steal a nomination or to steal an election is even worse than to steal a purse, for it is a theft of the people's rights, it is a theft from the people as a whole.

"Every honest man should set his face like flint against such dishonesty, whether it takes the form of swindling at the polls, or debauching a Legislature, or of the theft of a nominating convention.

"Two years ago the fight against Mr. Lorimer was started by a great Chicago newspaper, and was continued by certain private individuals. And we who then took part in that fight did so with the full knowledge that the average public man obviously thought it would come to nothing.

"Gradually, and especially in the recent contest in the Republican primaries we hammered it into the heads of the politicians that the people were against Lorimer and Lorimerism, and then the very men who had been seeking to profit by Lorimer's support, so long as they believed he would be useful, and some even at the last moment, who had hitherto defended him, turned against him.

"But, friends, remember that our real concern was not in smashing one bad man who by improper methods had secured his own election to the Senate, but in smashing the kind of politics of which he was the product.

"It is a bad thing to win a senatorship by such methods as Mr. Lorimer employed, but it is not one whit worse than to steal a nomination for the presidency by such methods as were employed by the bosses who controlled the Republican convention at Chicago last June. Certain of your New

"Bull Moose" Turns Out for Steam Roller

Yes Sir, T. R's. Auto Came Near Bumping Right Into a Flattening Machine Out Dedham Way.

News Item—Colonel Roosevelt met a steam roller at Dedham yesterday, when on his way to make his two speeches in Boston. T. R. smiled, and doffed his hat to the roller. Then the chauffeur turned the Roosevelt auto out to pass the roller.

MET 'EM BEFORE.
By MORTON BIRGE.

It was a big steam-roller, one that shook the earth with ease,
It trundled down toward Dedham town as lordly as you please,
And, coming up from Providence, to make his campaign felt
Both wide and far, by motor car, was Bull Moose Roosevelt.

The Moosers on the forward seat gazed outward with alarm.
They feared lest he—bold Colonel T.—might meet steam-roller harm.
"Beware, Beware!" they cried aloud, "Beware the Roller's rail.
Remember that they leave you flat. A roller has no soul."

The Bull Moose grinned and chortled gay and said: "I'm not afraid.
Chicago tried to get my hide, to roll me flat as braid.
The G. O. P. steam-roller failed to put me out of sight.
No roller now, I don't care how, can scare this Moose a mite."

England Senators, I regret to say, took the lead both in conducting the campaign for the defense of Mr. Lorimer and in putting through the steal of the Republican nomination at Chicago.

"Whatever else is to be said against these Senators, at least their action in these respects was consistent. Mr. Lorimer's personal representatives at the National Republican Convention at Chicago bore an active part in consummating the steal, and eagerly supported the nomination of the man in whose interests it was conducted, and this nor because they cared for him, but because they recognized in him and my associates their real foes.

Death for the Bosses.

"They recognized in the movement behind us the movement which has now created the Progressive party, a movement which meant the political death of them and their kind. When Senator Crane, Senator Aldrich, Senator Penrose, Senator Cullom, Senator Gallinger, Senator Dillingham and their associates, together with Senator Bailey, Senator Johnson and their associates on the Democratic side, stood by Senator Lorimer and Senator Lorimer's right to sit in the Senate, they were doing precisely and exactly what Messrs. Penrose, Crane, Guggenheim, Gallinger and their representatives later did when they secured the triumph of Lorimerism in the Republican convention at Chicago.

"There was no essential difference between the iniquity which culminated in Mr. Lorimer's election to the Senate and the iniquity which culminated in the theft of the Chicago convention. I condemn those who stood for both forms of iniquity.

"We Progressives propose to give the people power to rule their own nominating conventions and to control their own party organizations. Just as we propose to make them the real and not the nominal masters of their own public servants.

"We believe in direct preferential primaries because only by means of such primaries can the people really choose their own candidates without regard to the bosses.

Comparing the Platforms.

"You may remember that Mr. Wilson stated two days after his own nomination that he had not yet looked at the platform upon which he was nominated. I do not wonder when he did at last look at that platform that he became so thoroughly discontented with it that he now feels a distaste for all platforms.

"Wilson speaks as if the Progressive platform was very long. As a matter of fact, it is of almost the exact length of his own platform. The difference is that our platform states explicitly and definitely what we intend to do on the vital questions of the day and that it is entirely sincere and entirely practical, whereas Mr. Wilson's platform avoids the most important issues before our people and as regards the other issues make such impossible and conflicting promises as to render it out of the question to believe that there was a sincere purpose to have these promises taken seriously.

"We Progressives are much more fortunate in our platform. We do not have to apologize for it, nor to speak of it in language so carefully guarded as to convey the impression that we are endeavoring neither to repudiate it nor to support it.

"We stand on our platform. We do not ask that our platform be adopted by the nation. Our platform is our program; we treat it as such and, what is more, we treat it as a contract which we shall scrupulously fulfil if the people give us the power."

FOUR CANDIDATES IN FIELD FOR GOVERNOR

Foss and Pelletier for Democrats; Walker and Benton for G. O. P.; Papers All In.

Candidates for various State offices and also for Congress, have their nomination papers all filed with the election commissioners.

Yesterday the time for filing nomination papers expired. The lists will be certified, though, by the Secretary of State on Tuesday. As it was expected, several contests will make things lively in the political ring before the party candidates are picked by the "people."

Timothy Wilfred Coakley will not have his name on the ticket as either a Republican or Democratic aspirant. Mr. Coakley decided a few weeks ago to oppose Congressman James M. Curley, who for two years past has been in Congress from the Tenth District.

But Mr. Coakley having filed enough names secures a place as a regular Democratic candidate, and also as a Republican. Governor Foss met with the same fate when Congressman Hadley attempted to file "Democratic Progressive" papers for the Governor. The election commissioners and the Attorney-General have ruled that there is no Democratic Progressive party in this State.

Ruling Applies to Bull Moose.

This ruling also applies to the Bull Moose party relative to candidates having their names on the ballot under that designation.

The time for filing nomination papers expired at five o'clock last night. The names of Joseph Walker, former speaker of the Legislature, Governor Eugene N. Foss, District Attorney Joseph C. Pelletier and Colonel Everett C. Benton will be on the ballot. The Socialist party will have a complete ticket also, the election commissioners having allowed the papers of Professor Killen Hayes, as Secretary of State to be filed. The Secretary of State will determine whether a woman can run for a State office.

Timothy Wilfred Coakley, running under both the republican and democratic designations, is opposed by J. Frank O'Hare, and of course, by Congressman Curley, who seeks a second term.

There will be a lively scramble for the seats in the House this year. There are over 300 candidates from the twenty-six districts. The number varies from ten to forty in a ward.

Out to Beat Murray.

Another little scrap that will be watched with interest is between Sheriff Quinn, Lieutenant Governor Murray and Councillor Cunningham. Sheriff Quinn is trying for both the Republican and Democratic nominations. Mr. Cummings wants but one, the Democratic. Mr. Desmond is only ambitious enough to want the Republican nomination.

Congressman William F. Murray of the Ninth District will have his troubles securing a second nomination. John J. Walsh and John F. Sullivan have both cast their hats in the ring, having filed sufficient names with the Election Commissioners to secure a place on the ticket.

The Democratic governorship nomination will be freely on only the Democratic end. Edward F. Berry is out to defeat David I. Walsh, who defeated Berry for the nomination last year. Lieutenant-Governor Luce is unopposed for the Republican nomination.

FIND BODY IN HARBOR.

Police Believe the Man May be Slayer's Victim.

Discovery of the badly bruised body of a young man in the harbor off the East Boston waterfront yesterday, led the East Boston police to believe that a murder might have been committed.

In a pocket of the clothing was a letter addressed to "William F. Sawyer, No. 109 Saratoga street, East Boston."

The body was resting off Lookwood's Wharf, just south of the East Boston slip of the North Ferry.

The description of the body and clothing was given by the police as follows:

Age about twenty-three years; five feet, ten inches in height; 160 pounds weight; light complexion, smooth face, dark mixed suit, leather belt, red stockings.

SECOND CHURCH CONGRESS.

Sessions Will Open in Congress on Aug. 31.

The second annual Church Congress for men will be held at St. Andrew's Church, Concord, beginning Saturday, Aug. 31, and continuing until Sept. 2. The purpose of the congress will be to bring out practical ways in which the men can be of help in their own churches. Dean E. Rosenmiller of St. Paul's Cathedral, will deliver one of the addresses.

WOMEN FEATURE OF PROGRESSIVE FEAST

The Progressive banquet at McLeake's Hotel, Point of Pines, was notable in many ways but it will go down into history as the first time that the women of Massachusetts participated in a big political meeting on exactly the same terms as the men.

The women received, and appreciated it and there were as excited and jubilant as children. There was a large percentage of them young beautifully gowned and very attractive.

Having a great crowd of women at a pow-wow was strange enough, but what put the political reporters completely at sea was the fact that they didn't know many of the males present. All the good old gang that follows such affairs was somewhere else, and in their place was a band of quite different sort. They looked like business and professional men rather than office-holders or office-seekers, and their zeal for their party and their devotion to Roosevelt was extraordinary.

It was only necessary to look at their faces as he spoke to realize that they were enthusiasts and he was their Moses. They revelled in his witticisms, hung on his words, cheered madly and excitedly at the slightest opportunity.

It became manifest that the presence of women would tend to make them quiet, the mistake was soon discovered, for a milder, more vociferous multitude never applauded a candidate.

When the speaking began these climbed through the windows into the hall or perched upon the sills. They were undismayed to see beautifully gowned women scrambling through the windows, climbing over chairs and seem upon the tables in order to see better, but that's what they did. Honest!

The speakers were former District Attorney Arthur D. Hill, C. S. Bird of Walpole, Mrs. Susan N. Fitzgerald and Mrs. Helen Cook. Roosevelt addressed them during the soup and hurried away to Boston, but other speeches came later in the evening.

VETERANS WILL NOW GET PENSION MONEY

President Taft Signs Appropriation Bill and the Old Soldiers Rejoice.

All New England pension claims will be paid by Tuesday at the latest. This welcome news comes from Washington yesterday with the announcement that President Taft's first official act of the day was to sign $160,000,000 pension appropriation bill.

The pension department was promptly notified and in no time orders were being flashed over the telegraph wires instructing the eighteen agencies in the country to start paying at once the vast number of pensions held up by the delay in Congress.

The order will carry gladness into thousands of homes. It will come as a timely aid to hundreds of needy persons.

Pension Agent Holtt, in charge of the Boston agency, has on hand only $40,000 at the present time.

Goodwin to Get Out in Month, Says Doctors

Quick Recovery of Comedian Due to Healthy Living, Says Miss Moreland.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 19.—Nat C. Goodwin, who was injured when he was hit by a boat at Santa Monica, according to his physicians today will be able to get about in three or four weeks. No operation will be necessary they say.

Miss Marjorie Moreland, who has been the leading woman in Mr. Goodwin's company of late years and who was with him when he was dashed from the skiff in attempting a landing on the coast near Hueneme, was jubilant when informed of the verdict of the physicians.

"That Mr. Goodwin has escaped with out more harmful results, I attribute to his healthy manner of living," said Miss Moreland. "We have been eating on training rules and he has kept sincerely at his gymnasium work, something in which I have encouraged him.

"We box together, ride, swim and lead a healthy existence, and this with the natural degree of vitality he possesses he has to thank for the hope of soon getting about again.

"We have two doctors and two nurses caring for him and during the past few hours he has shown such an amount of fortitude that I am sure he is rapidly recovering."

FEAR WORKMAN WAS KILLED BY AVALANCHE

Worcester Explorer's Wife in Party Reported Overwhelmed High in Himalaya Range.

Dr. W. Hunter Workman, the American mountain climber and explorer, reported to have been killed by an avalanche while climbing in the Himalaya range in the north of India with his wife and party, is a native of Worcester.

Great concern is felt by relatives and friends in Massachusetts concerning Mrs. Workman. The tidings from Bombay are vague. They don't make clear whether it was Mr. Workman or a guide who was killed. The cable states that the avalanche "overwhelmed the Workman party."

This causes alarm as to the welfare of Mrs. Workman. It is thought she and others may have been injured. Coolies brought in the information.

Mrs. Fanny Bullock Workman is also a native of Worcester and the daughter of the late Governor Bullock. She was born in 1850. Dr. Workman was born February 3, 1847.

As mountain climbers and explorers, Dr and Mrs. Workman faced many perils together. They started on the pilgrimages back in 1907 and have spent most of their time there since. They have made seven expeditions into unexplored regions of upper India.

MRS. F. B. WORKMAN

HITCHCOCK'S WIFE TO BRING DIVORCE SUIT

"We Have Gone Over the Limit for Theatrical Marriages," Says Flora Zabelle.

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—Unable to agree with her husband, Raymond Hitchcock, financially, theatrically or otherwise, Flora Zabelle Hitchcock will at once institute divorce proceedings. Mrs. Hitchcock was accompanied on her return from abroad by her father, M. Mangesarian; her pretty little sister, Charlotte, and the comic Charles M. Kondarian, who was almost punched in the steamship pier when he sailed away with "Mlle. Z.," as the comedian's wife prefers to call herself, several weeks ago.

"The trouble with Raymond and me," said Mrs. Hitchcock, "is temperamental, and also we have gone the limit and overall for theatrical marriages. Seven years—almost think of it."

"Do you consider seven years as the limit for a theatrical marriage?" Miss Zabelle was asked.

"Rather now; don't you?"

"I have heard it fixed at seven months," spoke up another interviewer.

"Good," cried Mlle. Z. "That is more like it; so you see our marriage has been quite wonderful and long drawn out. The real trouble, as I said, is our failure to agree financially, theatrically or otherwise. Naturally a barrier rises up, and we must live separately, follow a divided career, and of course divorce proceedings will come as a natural consequence."

S. B. Hubbard, 71, Weds In Romance

Purchasing Agent of Cambridge Makes Miss Dodge, School Librarian, His Bride.

A romance coursing through the ordinarily dry channel of school text books was revealed yesterday when Sanford B. Hubbard, purchasing agent of the Cambridge School Department, seventy-one years old, was married to Miss Annie F. Dodge, librarian of the Cambridge High and Latin school, who is twenty-four years his junior.

In his capacity of purchasing agent for the schools Mr. Hubbard bought school text books for the pupils.

In her capacity as librarian at the High and Latin school Miss Dodge issued these books to the pupils.

The two had a common interest in school books for several years, and eventually found they had another and a greater interest.

The result of this departmental romance was the wedding yesterday afternoon. The ceremony was performed at the home of Judson D. Wheeler, No. 50 Grafton street, Newton, who is a relative of the bride.

The couple were unattended. A few close friends and intimate friends were guests.

The Rev. G. H. Parkinson, pastor of New Centre Methodist Episcopal Church, officiated. After the honeymoon Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard will live on Forest street, Cambridge.

FORMER LAWRENCE OFFICIAL IS ACCUSED

James J. Stanley, Once of the Poor Farm, Is Charged With Larceny.

SALISBURY, Aug. 17.—James J. Stanley, formerly superintendent of the Lawrence poor farm, who is here for the Summer, was served with a summons today to appear in the Lawrence Court on a charge of larceny. The summons was given by Inspector Charles B. Vose. Stanley was for thirteen years superintendent of the poor farm and was removed about three months ago. It is claimed that when he left he took with him chairs, tables, carpets, rugs, etc., that were paid for by the city. As he has failed to return these articles, the summons was issued.

GUESTS FLEE HOTEL FIRE.

Loss of $50,000 Caused to Rye Beach Property.

RYE BEACH, N. H., Aug. 17.—One hundred and fifty guests, vacationists, fled from their beds when fire broke out at 2:15 a. m. today in the Hotel Marden, the most fashionable boarding house and hotel here.

The fire destroyed the building, together with an ice house, a garage and two barns. Nearby cottages were saved only by the frantic endeavors of the cottagers who formed bucket brigades to fight the flames. The loss was $50,000.

Half a Century in the Public Service

A record which means much more than a long-time-in-business. If the service had not been good service, this heading could never have been written.

The people of Boston liked our merchandise, were pleased with the values, and the liberal, fair and square treatment extended to all.

So it was that more and more people made use of the Butler service and the service grew in proportion—enlarging in "range" of merchandise, as well as in volume.

And now we move into larger and more convenient quarters (the present Filene buildings), quarters which enable us to extend our lines to meet every possible demand in the way of style, quality and value.

This Transplanting Sale means that not one dollar's worth of merchandise will be moved to the new store. There is but one way to insure quick distribution—i. e., through the channel of

DEEPLY CUT PRICES

Only 12 days more, and thousands of dollars' worth of seasonable goods to clear away.

BATTLE OF "BLUES" AND "REDS" A DRAW

New York Saved Temporarily by Brave Defence of Blue Forces.

NEWTOWN, Ct., Aug. 17.—New York is safe from the Red foemen who have been endeavoring to sweep down upon it from these Connecticut hills.

The city's brave Blue defenders fought the theoretical enemy to a standstill today in a battle which thundered up and down the Housatonic Valley from 7 o'clock till noon. Neither side can be said to have won.

The invaders, in a desperate effort to disarm, crumpled up the right wing of the Blues, and in a thrilling charge down Cole's Hill, most of here, swept everything before them and entered the hollow with hypothetical ease.

The defenders on the other hand, assisted and running under the right wing of the Reds, which were attempting to make a flanking movement, succeeded in the theoretical carnage in this half of the fight as well as in the other. The battle ended in a draw. New York was saved temporarily, because the enemy, for obvious reasons, was forced to run off its water supply, and though the Blue defenders were considerably weakened in numbers they might be considered strong enough to hold off the Reds until Blue reinforcements could arrive, which would happen in actual warfare.

Break Camps Today.

Today's battle ended the manoeuvres, and tomorrow camps will be broken and the troops will entrain for home, the Canal all alive again, and the only wounds suffered feet and sunburned noses.

At daybreak the two armies, each 10,000 strong, and composed of both regulars and militia, are drawn out in lines three or four miles apart, extending approximately northwest and southeast, with their centre not far from here.

As the sun got up there were as many spectators as there were fighting men. It was a cool, clear morning.

Brigadier-General Tasker H. Bliss, the chief umpire, looked on from Rosalds Castle, a mansion on the top of Cole's hill. Governor Foss of Massachusetts, Generals Barry and Sumner of the regular army and Police Commissioner Waldo of New York were among the interested spectators.

Have to Give Way.

The New York cavalry and infantry, backed by artillery, held out fiercely in the face of the steady rifle fire of the irrepressible Reds, but had to give way.

By the reservoir on a promontory of the plateau, the Blues took their final stand and delivered a furious artillery volley. At 12:15 o'clock the Seventh Regiment of New York emerged from a wood and led the charge upon the Blue supporting battery. Lieutenant Feulois, while scouting in an aeroplane, was compelled to descend at 10:30 in the very midst of the field, between the two lines and within thirty yards of an advancing Blue rush. His descent was safe, but it put him, technically out of the combat for the day.

$1,000 A DAY FOR ASTOR BABY DOCTOR

Surgeon Cragin to Be in Constant Attendance for Six Weeks.

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—If all reports are true, John Jacob Astor sixth is the most expensive baby ever brought into the world.

Gossip in the medical world is that Dr. Edwin Bradford Cragin, who is responsible for the safe advent of this interesting baby, is receiving $1,000 a day for each and every day he is in attendance on Mrs. Madeleine Force Astor and her young son.

Dr. Cragin left his country place, The Wayside, Cohasset, Ct., and took up his residence at the Astor mansion on Sunday, August 4. John Jacob Astor 4th made his appearance on Wednesday, August 14.

It is expected that Dr. Cragin will remain a member of the Astor household until early in September, for Mrs. Astor is most anxious that her son shall be correctly started on a healthy and hearty career, and that the bewildering infantile relapse and shall be healthy and strong and normal, that she may properly rear the child to whom she must be both mother and father, and to whom she expects and wishes to devote her life.

At House Six Weeks.

The chances are that Dr. Cragin will be in constant attendance for nearly six weeks. At the reported rate of $1,000 a day, his fee in that case would total between $40,000 and $42,000.

No prince of royal blood, no heir to kingly throne, ever entered this world under such expensive conditions. But, then, kings do not have the money to spend that American millionaires have.

To give his undivided attention to Mrs. Astor, Dr. Cragin, when he went to his summer home, rented all the cottages next to Dr. George H. Ryder of No. 42 West Fiftieth street.

His own residence, No. 10 West Fiftieth street, is closed, save for workmen, who are renovating the interior. The front windows are green-shaded and dusty. The front door is closed. Occasionally the basement door opens to a workman, and once in a blue moon the telephone is answered, with the information that "Dr. Cragin is out of town; Dr. Ryder is attending his patients."

A card in the window refers also to Dr. Ryder.

Brief Visits to His Home.

Nearly every day, however, Dr. Cragin pays a half-hour visit to his home, but only to look it over and see how repairs are progressing.

In the meantime he is earning what is believed to be the biggest fee ever paid a doctor under similar conditions. For one case, if report be true, and Dr. Cragin has not granted any interview to admit or deny it, he is receiving a comfortable fortune, as much as a great many doctors receive during a lifetime; certainly more than many of them are able to amass.

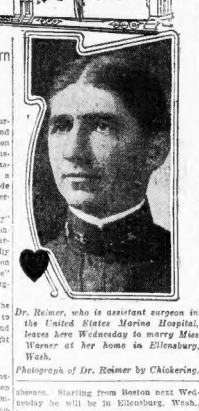
Architect Wheelwright Buried.

Funeral services for Edmund W. Wheelwright, one of Boston's leading architects, were held from King's Chapel yesterday afternoon. The service was conducted by Rev. Howard N. Brown, minister of King's Chapel.

Crosses Continent to Wed Surgeon Reimer in Romance

DR. REIMER AND BRIDE-TO-BE, LUCILLE WARNER.

Boston Doctor and Western Bride to Pass Honeymoon in Germany.



Dr. Reimer, who is assistant surgeon in the United States Marine Hospital, leaves here Wednesday to marry Miss Warner at her home in Ellensburg, Wash.

Photograph of Dr. Reimer by Chickering.

Dr. Hugo B. C. Reimer, assistant surgeon in the U. S. Marine Hospital and Public Health Service, will leave Boston Wednesday on a 3,000-mile trip to Ellensburg, Wash., will wed Miss Lucille Ellanore Warner and will then start on a 6,000-mile honeymoon trip with his bride back across this country and over to Germany.

This will not be any "Billie Murray" honeymoon, either. The Charlestown Congressman, it will be remembered, was married last Sunday. Two days later he sadly made his bride bon voyage as she sailed on a trip abroad, while Congressman Billie returned to his official duties in Washington.

No such melancholy schedule is on the cards for Dr. Reimer. He is going to study in Germany for a whole year and his pretty Western bride is going right along with him.

Bride Student in Boston.

Miss Warner is not a stranger to Boston. She is a graduate of the Emerson College of Oratory in Boston. Her coming to this city to study led to her acquaintance with Dr. Reimer.

A year ago a friend of Miss Warner gave a house party. This friend is also a friend of Dr. Reimer, who was in the list of guests. Dr. Reimer met and was honorably taken with Miss Warner of Washington.

Miss Warner became much interested in Dr. Reimer. The doctor is a graduate of Bucknell College and of Harvard Medical School. At Bucknell he was a noted runner. For seven years he has been an assistant surgeon in the U. S. Marine and Public Health Service. He is attached to the U. S. Marine Hospital here, connected with the Chelsea Naval Hospital, and is an official duty at the immigration headquarters, where he makes a specialty of examining the eyes of immigrants. He is a member of the B. A. A.

Though a young man Dr. Reimer has had wide experience through his government duties and is familiar with the many interesting and often pathetic sides of immigrant inspection.

The government surgeon and the Western girl became friendly, then very chummy and then so extremely interested in each other that intimate friends began to notice. But Miss Warner was graduated without any engagement being announced and returned to her Western home. Now it develops that they were engaged before but didn't tell it till they were ready.

Dr. Reimer has secured a year's leave of absence. Starting from Boston next Wednesday he will be in Ellensburg, Wash., by the first of next week.

On September 2 comes the wedding at the home of the bride-elect's mother, the wealthy Mrs. Ellen G. Warner.

The couple will come to Boston to stay a few days. Then they sail for Germany. Dr. Reimer will attend the clinics in Zurich, Berlin and Vienna, devoting a year to special study. Then he and his bride will return to Boston, where Dr. Reimer will become eye specialist in the Marine Hospital and immigration service at this port.

TROLLEY TO BUZZARD'S BAY

Vote to Build Line After Forty Years' Fight for Road.

PLYMOUTH, Aug. 17.—After forty years, there is a prospect of rail communication south to Buzzard's Bay.

The Plymouth & Sandwich Railway Company was chartered many years ago to build and operate a trolley line between Plymouth and Sandwich, but the company constructed only a few miles.

At the annual meeting of the directors this week it was definitely determined to build the road further and connect at Buzzard's Bay station on the line of the N. Y., N. H. & H. railroad with the New Bedford, Middleboro & Onset trolley road.

CONFESSES $4,000 CAMBRIDGE THEFTS

Burglar's Disclosures Involves Others; New Arrests May Follow.

Disclosures made into last night by Alexander Sherrer to the Cambridge police may result in more arrests in connection with the series of burglaries in that city during the past month.

Sherrer has confessed to nine breaks and the larceny of more than $4,000 worth of loot from wealthy residents in the University City, according to the police.

The breaks he has confessed to were, say the police, at the following houses:

Mrs. Elinor Stetson, No. 128 Brattle street; Mrs. Sarah Cutler, Mercer Circle; O. F. Kendall, 1563 Massachusetts avenue; Professor Henry Ter, 7 Lowell street.

Two Boston men, who for years have done a bi business in old silver ware, are under suspicion in connection with the case. The Cambridge police intimate that their arrests will probabl be made toda.

Early yesterday morning James Landrigan, reserve officer, saw a man with a bundle coming out of O. F. Kendall house at No. 1563 Massachusetts avenue. Knowing that the Kendall family was away for the Summer, Landrigan ordered the stranger to stop, but he ran and was caught after a exciting chase.

Gordon gave his home address as No. 112 East Howard street, Quincy. He also said that he had a room in a house near the corner of Massachusetts avenue and Tremont street. The police found several suit cases at this room filled with loot.

In 1906 Sherrer was sent to State Prison for seven years for burglary. He was released in February.

ARRESTED AS BIGAMIST.

New York Man Said to Be Worth $3,000,000.

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—J. J. Warren, said to be worth $3,000,000, was arrested at his home, No. 32 Central Park west, today, charged with bigamy. Warren was married to Miss Clarissa Prescott, a music teacher, in Fairfield, Ct., by a justice of the peace recently. Later another woman, claiming to be Warren's first wife, showed up and brought suit. Warren claims he was divorced from her.

Deny Semi-Exile of Kaiser's Son Is Over

Official Statement Says Nothing Is Known of Alleged Return.

BERLIN, Aug. 17.—The widely circulated rumors that the Crown Prince's semi-exile at Danzig had nearly ended, and that the Prince, with his family, would return shortly to Potsdam, met with a sudden check the other day through an official statement from the Chamberlain of the Prince's household, published in the "Vossische Zeitung," that absolutely nothing is known at Danzig as to the alleged return.

In well-informed circles it is considered highly probable that the Prince's promotion to the rank of Colonel with the Konigsberg Grenadier Regiment will follow early in the Autumn.

Meanwhile the Crown Princess, with her children, is at the seaside, the Prince being at military exercises at Arcys, East Prussia.

Last week, according to a local paper, there was a large assembly of the veterans' school children and of townsfolk of Arcys and the neighborhood to welcome the Prince on his arrival. The latter, in the friendliest and most unrestrained manner, as is his wont, mingled with the people, a proceeding which has already contributed greatly to his popularity amongst all classes of Germans.

Seeing a group of boys approaching the Prince asked: "Boys, why are you here?"

"To see the Crown Prince," was the prompt reply.

"Well, then, just take a good look at him."

The Prince laughed heartily as he ever heard one small critic observe to another, "Ach Gott, how thin!"

SIX HURT IN CRASH.

Pennsylvania Railroad 18-Hour N. Y.-Chicago Flyer Derailed.

LIMA, O., Aug. 17.—Six persons were injured and the passengers badly shaken up when five Pullman coaches on the Pennsylvania eighteen-hour flier from New York to Chicago, were derailed today near Middlepoint, O. The fact that the coaches were all steel undoubtedly prevented loss of life. The rails were ripped up and twisted.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 17.—One man was killed and four injured in a collision between a freight and a work train at Conway station, on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, near here, today. All the victims were laborers of the work train.

To Wed Harvard Man.

Miss Mary Smith is to marry Carl Whiton Wade, Harvard '10, at the Mariborough, in Baltimore, her home city, on September 4. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Smith. Invitations have just been issued.

MISS LASELL TO BE MARRIED ON SEPT. 14

Set Date for Horse Owner's Daughter's Marriage to Minturn Verdi of New York.

A society wedding that has a note of interest for horsemen, will take place Saturday afternoon, Sept. 14, at Whitinsville, when Miss Marion Lasell will become the bride of Minturn de Suzara Verdi of New York city, formerly of Boston.

Miss Lasell is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Chester Whitin Lasell of Whitinsville. Mr. Lasell is widely known as a gentleman driver and breeder of race horses.

The beautiful Lasell estate, "Oakhurst" is known among horsemen the country over for its kennels and stables, as well as being known to society as the scene of fine hospitality.

The bride-elect is a horse-lover's true daughter. Pretty tales are told in Whitinsville of Miss Lasell's fondness for her father's blooded steeds. She is keenly interested in the horses, pets them a great deal and handles them expertly.

The engagement of Miss Lasell and Mr. Verdi was announced in June. She is a member of the Vincent, Clifton and Newe Riding Clubs of Boston and has taken many ribbons with her own and her father's horses.

Mr. Verdi is the son of Mrs. Clio de Suzara Verdi of Boston, who was Miss Caroline Minturn. After his Harvard days Mr. Verdi began to practice law in New York city, where he now lives.

Elaborate preparations are afoot for the bridal. The wedding guests who will be entertained at "Oakhurst" will attend a bridal dinner the night before the wedding. On the bridal day there will be a supper after the wedding, followed by dancing and a lawn fete.

Mr. Verdi and his bride will go abroad for their honeymoon. Returning, they will live at No. 785 Park avenue, New York city. They will receive November 6 and November 16.

STEAM ROLLER KILLS BOY

Gloucester Mother Rushes Out to Find Her Child Dead.

GLOUCESTER, Aug. 17.—Three-year-old Dorothy Hastings, son of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Harding of No. 11 Perkins street, this city, was run over by a steam road roller this afternoon in front of his home and instantly killed. When the mother rushed from the home, it was to find her child dead under the roller.

HENRY SIEGEL CO.'S AUGUST FURNITURE SALE

Largest and Coolest Restaurant in New England. Popular Prices. Music 12 to 2

There is only one Siegel August Furniture Sale. The difference between it and the others in this: Everybody knows that a large quantity of anything costs less in proportion than a small quantity. Therefore, four stores can buy (and sell) cheaper than any individual store. There are four Siegel stores—one in Boston, two in New York and one in Chicago. Consequently we get inside prices on Furniture and we are prepared to quote inside prices on YOUR Furniture. Week before last a lady selected Furniture at one of the other August Furniture Sales and was quoted a price of $675. She then duplicated her selections here and the bill came to $575 at Siegel prices. We saved her $100 and this is happening every day. So the Siegel August Furniture Sale is greater by 20% than last year. Some particularly good bargains are advertised for the Fifth Week, and there are hundreds of other bargains not advertised. Mail Orders Filled.

BIG LIQUOR SEIZURE IN RAID AT ONSET

Summer Colonists Look on as Wareham Committee Descends on 10 Houses.

ONSET, Aug. 17.—Watched by hundreds of Summer colonists, most of them drawn from two society dances, officials of the Wareham committee for the suppression of crime, raided ten houses here tonight and cleaned up two wagon loads of beer and whisker. It was the biggest liquor raid ever made on the Cape.

Dr. F. F. Marsh, president of the raiding committee, and living in Wareham, led the raiders in automobiles. Most of the officers were called from other towns, some of them from faraway Mynauls. The local authorities were asked to help only at the eleventh hour. It was intimated there was a fear that the alleged liquor sellers might get a tip and thus escape arrest.

Eight Under Arrest.

As a result of the wholesale raids, eight arrests were made, and a posse of men and officers went on a hunt for two men who made a getaway by leaping from second story windows.

The raiding party proceeded from Cape Cod in automobiles, and met together in the center of the local colony. At the time the streets were filled with promenaders. At the Point Independent Yacht Club was being held an extended social and dance. Another dance was in progress at the Colonial Casino. The dancers swarmed from the floors at the first shouts of those on the street. Shouts followed the officers in private machines, and before the raids had been concluded hundreds had gathered.

Jump from Window.

The raiders were led by Dr. Marsh and John J. Maloney of Hyannis. They first proceeded to a settlement known as "Pogo," occupied by foreigners.

At the house of two men known as "Tony and Amos, the Twins," the doors were found locked. The two men jumped from upper story windows and escaped into the woods. Those arrested, including three women were: Rose Zion, John Rodergus, Charles John Mrs. Daniel Decortic, Mrs Miuel Pina, John Pina, Manuel Rodergue and Antone Pina.

From "Pogo," still followed by the Summure colonists, the raiders went to two other settlements, to clean up both. It was expected the raiding would wind up about dawn.

SURPRISE IN MIDDLEBORO

O'Hars, Democrat, Enters Field for Representative.

MIDDLEBORO, Aug. 17.—The time for filing nomination papers expired this afternoon at 5 o'clock, papers of candidates for State offices for both parties were filed.

A surprise was sprung on the politicians this afternoon when it was noised about that there was to be a Democratic candidate in the field for Representative from this district. All doubt was dispelled when Stephen F. O'Hara of South Main street filed his papers this afternoon for the Democratic nomination for that office.

Corelli Girl Killed in Grand Juror's Auto

W. S. Hastings, Wealthy Owner of Car that Rode to Death in Windsor, Ct.

NEW HAVEN, Ct., Aug. 17.—After the entire State police force had been called upon to solve the mystery of the wealthy married man, in whose auto pretty Annie Corelli was riding when she was killed Wednesday night, it was disclosed that the car belonged to Walter S. Hastings of Windsor, a grand juror of that town, which he has represented twice in the Connecticut Legislature.

As grand juror he has been very rigorous in enforcing the law. Influence exerted from some powerful but secret source has prevented his name from being made public till tonight, and Coroner William Egy, who took his testimony and also the ante-mortem statement of the dying girl, even now refuse to confirm the name.

Chief Egan of the State police, however, is responsible for the statement that the car belonged to Hastings. The latter cannot be found in his home at Windsor.

When the Corelli sisters, Annie and Rhea, were picked up by Hastings in his automobile late Wednesday night, they had never seen him before. They were awaiting a trolley car in Milford to take them home. The chauffeur, Howard Halsey, complained soon after that he was not acquainted with the roads. He missed his direction and went over an embankment.

MARRIED 50 YEARS.

D. W. Bugbee and Wife Celebrate Anniversary.

Relatives and friends gathered at the home of Daniel Webster Bugbee, at No. 105 Brook avenue, Roxbury, last night to celebrate the golden anniversary of the marriage of Mr. Bugbee and his wife. The elderly couple were surrounded by their three children and five grandchildren. Mr. Bugbee is a retired jeweler. The couple were married August 16, 1862. One week later Mr. Bugbee left his bride of seventeen and joined the Eleventh Massachusetts Battery. He served a year with the army. The couple received numerous presents last night, including a loaf of gold.

BOY DYING OF INJURY.

Run Over on Unity Street by Wine Company Wagon.

John Cattrasome, aged six, of No. 6 Canney place, North End, was run over in Unity street last night by a wagon owned by the Neapolitan Wine Company and driven by John Motal of No. 44 North street. The child's skull was fractured. He is dying at the Relief Hospital. Motal is under arrest at the Hanover street station, awaiting the outcome of the boy's injuries.

Rev. A. George E. Jenner, curate of All Saint's Episcopal church, Ashmont, has accepted the rectorship of St. Ann's Church, Pleasant street, Dorchester, succeeding the Rev. Frederick A. Reeve, who resigned recently. Mr. Jenner will begin his new duties about October 1.

Countess Magri a Shopkeeper Mrs. Tom Thumb in Middleboro

THE COUNT AND COUNTESS MAGRI.

With the Count, She Runs "Primo's Pastime" and Caters to Motorists.

MIDDLEBORO, Aug. 17.—Countess Magri, formerly Mrs. Tom Thumb, who has encircled the globe and been presented to more royal heads than any other person living outside of royal circles, and who for years was one of the attractions of Barnum's big show, has now turned storekeeper.

With her husband, Count Primo Magri, she has fitted up a small store near their home on Summer street here and is catering to the automobile trade that passes. They sell cigars, tonics, ice cream, pastry, bread and candy.

The store has been named by the pair Primo's Pastime. They will, however, close the store when cold weather sets in, for they are to start for the Pacific Coast in the Fall. They are the world's smallest shopkeepers.

The Countess, who has been in public life more than fifty years, said: "We are not in the store business for the real money that is in it, nor do we intend to compete with any of the storekeepers of the town.

Run Store to Kill Time.

"My husband and I have a lot of time off from the stage in the Summer months and we thought that this was the best way of taking up our minds and it was the Count's suggestion that opened the store, as you see on the sign, "Primo's Pastime." He is the proprietor and I am the clerk. Rather strange, isn't it?"

"We have many of our friends come here, and especially motorists. We love the public and they love us. Why, you ought to see how quickly we sell a big batch of doughnuts that are made fresh every morning; they last no time."

Count Primo Magri, who is over sixty, is the busiest man in the neighborhood, driving to the centre of the town nearly every day, getting ice cream and supplies, keeps his little legs on the move all the time.

The Countess, who is seventy years old, but does not look it, sometimes relates to customers some of her experiences of the show world in more than half a century.

Regarding politics, the Countess said: "I know President Taft and have had several interviews with him, and I like him. I know women vote in California and Colorado. I have been in the latter State when they have voted and I see no confusion about it at all, but I am not ready to go on record as for or against any such new ideas in the way of government."

While the reporter was seated in her snug home, the Countess said, "While I am talking I will tell you how I happened to go into the show business and what I think of it.

"I was born right here in Middleboro near where we now live on October 31, 1861, so you see I am not afraid to tell how old I am. My parents were of the usual stature. My sister, Minnie Warren, was small, but my three brothers were big men.

She Goes on Stage.

"One day a man came to the school and asked the teacher if Fannie Warren went to school there. The teacher told him no, but Lavinia Warren did and that was my name. The man asked me if I would like to go out and see the world.

"My parents would not listen to the idea at first, but after we talked the matter over they finally consented after the man told them a woman would be with me all the time.

"I went to St. Louis and the first place I appeared at was with Spaulding and Rogers show boats. These boats were fitted up like a theatre and the people saw the show as the boats were going up and down the river.

"After being on the stage for a short time I met Tom Thumb. We were married in Grace Church in New York in 1863. Shortly after that we joined Barnum's Museum, which, at that time had nothing to do with the circus show at all. We formed a troupe of the General, Commodore Nutt, my sister, Minnie Warren, and myself, all small people. We toured England, France and Egypt and in 1869 the General decided on a trip around the world. We travelled four years with Barnum and then we went with Barnum's circus for eight months. While we were in Milwaukee in 1881, General Tom Thumb was taken sick and we came home and in 1883 the General died here."

"I left public life for about two years but became so lonesome I went back to it and here I am still at it. In 1885 I met Count Primo Magri and later was married in Holy Trinity Church in New York City. We afterward quit circus life, as I did not like it, and formed a company of our own. We are pleased to be able to travel, but this country is better for shows than

PETITION MAYOR TO SAVE MT. IDA SITE

A protest was made by citizens of Ward 20, Dorchester, last night, at a meeting in Blake Hall, Dorchester, against the delay of the park commission in building the proposed playground for the Mt. Ida district. It was charged that although an appropriation of $100,000 was made for the playground last Spring, the park commission has made no move to acquire the site.

As a result of the meeting a petition, signed by prominent Dorchester people will be presented to Mayor Fitzgerald this week, calling on the Mayor and the park board to take immediate action in the matter of buying the ground for the playground. It is claimed that houses may be built on the proposed site for the playground because of the park board's delay.

WOMEN AT T. R. DINNER.

Daughter of Ex-Governor Garvin at Feast After Rally.

PROVIDENCE, Aug. 17.—Three women, one the daughter of former Governor Garvin, were guests at the dinner which the executive committee of the Rhode Island Progressives tendered to Colonel Roosevelt after his rallies here. The festivities lasted until after midnight.

GOV. WILSON PAYS TRIBUTE TO WOMEN

"Will Be as Indispensable in Politics as They Are Delightful," Says Candidate.

When women come into politics they will show us the contrast between life and politics. They will be as indispensable as they are delightful.—Woodrow Wilson.

SEAGIRT, N. J., Aug. 17.—Governor Wilson delivered two speeches at the New Jersey Day celebration here this afternoon. The first was to the men, and concerned the politics of the State of New Jersey, with a surprising reference to the Roosevelt progressive movement. The second, delivered to the Women's Wilson and Marshall League, which was organized on the grounds in the course of the day, was as much of a surprise.

Governor Wilson has never expressed himself on the subject of woman's suffrage but in this speech, though he did not touch directly on any of the others, he certainly gave the women a hearty welcome to the field of politics where he said they would be as indispensable as they are delightful.

The Governor's speech to the women was made from the porch of the little office building at the south end of the grounds. It was heartily received by perhaps 200 of the most prominent women in New Jersey. The Governor said:

"I know how all powerful the ladies are in any movement they care to put their strength and charm into. Politics is really the life of us, from the standpoint of what can be done by legislation. When the women, who are in so many respects part of that life, begin to take an interest in politics, then you know that sympathy and intellect are going to be inforced so that our politics will be of the same pattern as our lives.

"Nobody is more in contact with the cost of living. The men do not, for example, have to determine their own fashions. We are dressed by our tailors, willy nilly, and sometimes very grotesquely. The ladies have to exercise their own taste, and among them they sometimes exercise a great deal. When it comes to the immediate contact of the pocketbook with life, the women know where the sensitive nerve is. They do the purchasing and careful planning, which is necessary for these days of increasing cost.

"The fundamental thing in life is the way we are going to live. It is not only a matter of satisfying our stomachs, but of attaining respectability among our neighbors. Our amount of income has a great deal to do with that. We men talk a great deal about the cost of meat and potatoes, but we do not buy a peck nor a pound to a month. I once had the distinguished honor of buying a pair of kid gloves of a color I remember long when the time arrived. I consider that one of the achievements of my life, getting the right color. I have forgotten whether or not it was the right size. I buy a pair of gloves for myself only when I cannot think of anything else to do.

As I have said, when women come into politics they will show us the contrast between life and politics. They will be as indispensable as they are delightful."

The Governor's reference to the third party movement was made as an illustration of the necessity of the people which had overthrown the old political ring, which for years dominated New Jersey. He said:

"I suppose you know the force that is behind the new party recently formed, the so-called Progressive party. It is the force of discontent with the regular parties of the United States. It is the feeling that men have gone into blind alleys and come out often enough and that they propose to find an open road for themselves."

Votes for Women on Belmont Checks

Rich Woman Suffrage Leader Introduces New Wrinkle to Advertise the Cause.

NEWPORT, Aug. 17.—The woman suffrage bank check is the latest frenzy in finance.

Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont introduced it. Mrs. Belmont is known as one of the richest and most resourceful of suffragists.

Casting about in her mind for a new way to advertise "Votes for Women," she thought of her check book. She put the idea in practice.

Mrs. Belmont banks with the Plaza branch of the Union Trust Company of New York. Anyone so fortunate as to receive one of her checks will see, stamped in fat letters on the left-hand corner, the words:

VOTES FOR WOMEN.

No matter how small the check, even if it be a dollar or so, it bears the suffrage slogan. The milkman, the butcher the grocer and other tradesmen see this battle cry staring them in the face every time they get one of the Belmont checks. If they don't like it, why they needn't take Mrs. Belmont's trade. But they like her trade too well to care what she puts on her checks so long as her signature is there.

Mrs. Belmont signs her checks with her personal name, "Alva E. Belmont."

"WALKER FAR IN LEAD."

Ex-Speaker's Manager in Gubernatorial Canvass Optimistic.

Optimism is the keynote at the headquarters of Joseph Walker, Republican gubernatorial candidate. Amos T. Saunders, chairman of the Walker campaign committee, in a statement given out last night, says that reports from various sections of the State are very encouraging and tend to show that Walker is far in the lead for the nomination.

"The nomination papers circulated in behalf of Mr. Walker in the Central Western parts of the State are being signed by age, the Cape Cod Storage and the Consolidated Storage

CAPE COD FISHERMEN ATTACK 'FISH TRUST'

Charge the Storage Houses at Provincetown Are in Combine; Want More Money.

PROVINCETOWN, Aug. 17.—Local fishermen are up in arms over an alleged combine on the part of the storehouses here to control the price and output of fish.

They complain that they are entirely at the mercy of the so-called "trust."

They charge that the four cold storage plants, in the maintainance of which Boston capital plays an important part, are holding back large quantities of fish for food and bait in order to reap exorbitant profits in times of scarcity.

Fishermen assert that 40,000 barrels of fish are now in cold storage here; that there are 15,000 barrels of food fish on hand, and that the warehouse interests await an opportunity to boost the price from 100 to 400 per cent.

All this is hotly denied by the warehouse managers, who reply that food fish has not been accumulated by them, and that the only fish being held in storage are large quantities of pogies and squid to be used as Winter bait.

The fishermen say they used to receive liveable rate for fish in the old days, but that in recent years their percentage has been gradually clipped until they are now reduced to almost starvation regime.

They declare that the big dealers, who have equipped fine storehouses, are making bigger profits than ever before, but refuse to share with them.

Three-quarters of the population of Provincetown goes down to the sea in ships. Most of these are Portuguese, a hardy race. They are willing to work hard, but when they saw other people becoming rich on the fruits of their toil while they were no better off, they concluded it was time to object, they say.

All of the fish that comes into Provincetown, they charge, must be sold to the four storage warehouses or rot in the holds of the schooners. These four storage warehouses are the Provincetown Cold Storage Company, the Fishermen's Specialties Company, the Cape Cod Storage and the Consolidated Storage.

THE E & R CLEANSING

PROCESS IS NOT MERELY A "SURFACE CLEANSER"

You know, of course, that your clothes put on a dull, draggled, lifeless appearance after a few weeks' wear.

—This is caused by fine particles of dust and dirt penetrating and eating into the fiber of the cloth.

You know, too, that while brushing, sponging and pressing freshen them for a day or so, they look worse afterward.

—The reason is that these operations merely remove surface dirt, having no penetrative properties they cannot reach the real trouble.

The sure remedy for bedraggled clothes is E & R Dry Cleansing—spots do not reappear, luster and finish do not wear off; fabrics do not become limp and lifeless after an E & R Cleansing.

—For the simple reason that our process penetrates—"goes after" dust and dirt and removes every particle of both.

Moreover, your clothes are sent home perfectly pressed, ready to put on. All garments are carefully packed in tissue paper and tied in the box to prevent wrinkling.

JORDAN FROM CELL WARNS YOUNG MEN

Straight and Narrow Path Is Best, Says Condemned Wife-Slayer.

Chester S. Jordan, the Somerville wife slayer, condemned to die in the electric chair at Charlestown during the week beginning Sunday, September 22, has sent out a warning to young men. He implores them to travel the "straight and narrow path."

Jordan's lawyers and relatives will file a petition for commutation of his sentence, based on insanity, with Governor Foss about September 5. Those interested in Jordan's fate express confidence that the Governor will refer the petition to the Executive Council.

From his cell in the East Cambridge jail, where he calmly awaits the outcome of the last desperate legal fight now being waged by his attorneys to save him from the agony and the disgrace of execution, the former vaudeville actor preaches an informal but intensely earnest sermon.

It is a plea prompted by a stricken conscience and comes from a penitent heart. It throbs with sincerity and pathos. It is the wail of a stricken soul which like untold thousands before, has come to as awakening too late. It is a text based upon his own failure. It is all the more effective because of its extreme brevity and directness.

Relatives Carries Message.

A relative to whom the prisoner confided his feelings and sentiments during a recent visit at the jail carried the message to the outside world. Said this relative yesterday:

"Chester told me he didn't want to die in the electric chair, not because he is afraid of death, but because he has fervent desire to live that he may atone as far as possible for his crime and errors.

"He feels that he can effect this contrition within prison walls and remarked that if it were possible to begin life anew in freedom he would show what benefits and beauties there are in righteous living. He said to me with quiet, but impressive emphasis:

"'IF I COULD ONLY LIVE MY LIFE OVER AGAIN! WHAT A DIFFERENT MAN I WOULD BE. IT IS TERRIBLE TO CONTEMPLATE ONE'S MISTAKES WHEN IT IS TOO LATE. I TRY NOT TO. I CRUSHES. IF YOUNG MEN COULD ONLY PEACE THEMSELVES IN MY PREDICAMENT. IF THEY COULD ONLY REALIZE BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE WHAT SHALLOWNESS AND SORROW THERE IS IN IT ALL. IF THEY COULD ONLY BE BROUGHT TO REALIZE THAT THEY ARE CHEATING THEMSELVES AND BRINGING PAIN TO THOSE WHO LOVE THEM. I'D GIVE ANYTHING TO HAVE THE CHANCE THAT THOUSANDS OF YOUNG MEN HAVE IN THE WORLD TODAY. BUT I FEAR SAY MANY DON'T APPRECIATE WHAT OPPORTUNITIES CONFRONT THEM.

"'THE STRAIGHT AND SIMPLE LIFE IS BEST.'"

Facing Ordeal Like a Man.

"It isn't often that Chester speaks of his case or position. He doesn't like to. His new line of thinking has taught him to think of pleasant and restful things.

"Chester is no coward. He is facing his ordeal like a man. He feels that his execution would cast a stain upon the family. He dreads that more than anything else. It seems. He doesn't care for himself. He doesn't flinch at death.

"On the contrary, he is amazingly composed and reconciled. Whatever the outcome he will meet it with implicit confidence in God. This tranquility is due to his pursuance of Christian Science and his fine frame of mind is the result in large measure of the frequent visits and administrations of G. Leonard McNeil of Cambridge, formerly first reader in the Christian Science Church in that city.

Thinks of His Mother.

"Chester spends most of his time reading Christian Science literature. He is in excellent health. His mother is most devoted and he thinks of her constantly. It has been a heavy burden for her to carry and hard on us all."

A petition with Governor Foss asking for commutation will be filed as soon as the prisoner's senior attorney, General Charles W. Bartlett, who is now touring Scotland, returns from Europe on September 3.

MOUNT HOPE GIRL, WHO IS TO MARRY EARLY IN OCTOBER

MISS ELSIE H. NICKERSON

Miss Elsie H. Nickerson, who will be married October 10 to Rudolph Emmel, a Forest Hills mining engineer now in Nevada.

MOUNT HOPE BELLE TO BE A RENO BRIDE

Mr. and Mrs. Jean P. Nickerson, of No. 371 Hyde Park avenue, Mount Hope, announce the engagement of their daughter, Miss Elsie H. Nickerson, to Rudolph Emmel, son of Mr. and Mrs. Rudolph Emmel, of Walk Hill street, Forest Hills.

Miss Nickerson is a graduate of the West Roxbury High School, and is popular in the younger social set of Roslindale and West Roxbury. She is a member of several social organizations. Her father is one of the most prominent attorneys of the section, and her grandfather, General Frank S. Nickerson of Needham, is a leading figure in G. A. R. circles.

Mr. Emmel is a graduate of Tech, class of '11, and is a mining engineer in one of the largest mines in Nevada. His parents are among the best known residents of Forest Hills, where they have lived for many years. Mr. Emmel is a nephew of Ralph S. Bauer, president of the Lynn Board of Trade.

The wedding, which will be solemnized October 10, will take place at Trinity Episcopal Church, Reno, Nevada, after which the young couple will pass their wedding trip at Lake Tahoe, California. Their future home will be at Ludwig, Nevada, where Mr. Emmel is located.

OVERRUN BY GRASSHOPPERS

Kansas Suffering from Worst Invasion in Years.

LARNED, Kan., Aug. 17.—According to Francis H. Milliken, State entomologist, Kansas is suffering this year from the worst invasion of grasshoppers she has experienced since the celebrated invasion of 1874.

ONE BATTLESHIP BILL PASSES HOUSE

Curley and Murray of Massachusetts Defy Cause and Vote for Larger Navy Plan.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—The little navy men of the House of Representatives triumphed today over the adequate demand by the Democratic platform by standing on roll call for one ship instead of two. The vote was 159 to 79.

The question is now up to the Senate, which has voted overwhelmingly heretofore for two ships, nearly all the Senators standing for the upbuilding of the navy.

Some fearless Democrats today showed that the caucus action was not binding by voting for two ships, but there was a lack of leadership in the fight for the two ships. Representative Foss, a Republican and former chairman of the House Naval Committee, made a brilliant speech in which he arraigned bitterly the divergence between the Democratic platform and the action of the Democratic House caucus. He asserted the caucus had given the lie to the platform. Mr. Foss also pointedly elaborated on the attitude of William Randolph Hearst in the contest for the honor and integrity of the navy, quoting from published opinions and advice of Mr. Hearst to the Democratic party.

Sharp Attack by Foss.

The indefensible position of the Democrats opened the door wide for unanswerable attack by the Republicans on the Democratic action in the fight for two ships, both before and since the consideration of the platform which Representative Foss dubbed a "Hyralized-Bryanized-Tammanyized platform." Many former two battleship Democrats today on the test vote were conspicuous by their absence. Among these were Representative Sulzer, who has been leading the fight for two battleships. Others, afraid of caucus bonds, voted against the two battleship program.

Mr. Foss, opening his speech, declared the Democratic party on this bill had demonstrated "its promise to err and blunder, to mix up politics and to show its inability to climb the heights of American statesmanship" by bringing to the House the "smallest, most insignificant and weakest naval program reported to this body for a great many years." (Applause on the Republican side.)

Quotes From Wilson.

"Heretofore," Mr. Foss said, "the navy was considered above party politics. In the judgment of the American people it believe the national defence is regarded as infinitely higher than that of partisanship. "It is considered higher, in fact, than the Washington monument is above the sifting sands of the New Jersey seacoast."

Mr. Foss charged that the Democrats with playing economy because this is an election year. He charged the House Democrats were trying to emulate Thomas Jefferson, and he quoted from Governor Woodrow Wilson's history, in which the Governor says: "Mr. Jefferson brought a party to power which had dismantled the navy which the Federalists had begun," etc.

Mr. Longworth here interrupted to say: "The gentleman has just stated what Professor Wilson has written with regard to Jefferson's stand on the American navy. Has the gentleman ever read anywhere a statement by Professor Wilson as to how Governor Wilson stands on the American navy?

Mr. Foss: "No, I have not read any such statement."

Mr. Foss then had some fun with one chipman.

"Well, you had a great convention over there in Baltimore, I refer to the Hyralized-Tammanyized convention. After you had nominated by nine successive ballots the speaker of this house, who holds the affection and confidence of every member in it, you permitted William Jennings Bryan to exercise the veto power on that presidential nomination, and you did not have the courage of your convictions nor the nerve nor the virility as a party to override that veto with a two-thirds vote."

Democrats who held out for the navy, aided the caucus and voted their convictions were: Curley and Murray, Massachusetts; Hamil and Kinkead, New Jersey; Lee, Pennsylvania; Maher, New York; Reilly, Connecticut; O'Shaunessy, Rhode Island.

Bill Sent to Conference.

Republicans who left their colleagues and voted to defeat two battleships were Anthony, Bartheldt, Davis, Helgesen, Lindbergh, McKinley, Mondell, Jackson, Norris, Campbell, J. M. Smith, Steenerson, Switzer, Weedemer, Willis, Young of Kansas.

Thayer of Massachusetts was ruled out of order in an attempt to have the one battleship designated as of the cruiser class. The bill was sent to conference with a disagreeing vote on all senate amendments, and Chairman Padget, of the House Committee, with Talbott, of Maryland, and Foss of Illinois were appointed the conferees on the part of the House.

DEFIES MELROSE POLICE.

Robert Philpot Runs Stone Crusher Without Permit.

Melrose is having a game of "tit, tat, toe," in which Mayor French, the police, a citizen and a stone crusher are sharing the honors. The game started when Robert Philpot, a heavy taxpayer, asked for a permit to run a stone crusher. This was refused. Now it is claimed that in the face of the police and the Mayor, Mr. Philpot is running his crusher all he wants to. Not content with that, Mr. Philpot has complained to the Mayor regarding the poor condition of Melrose streets.

KELLEY OUT FOR HOUSE.

Ward 20 Has Fighting Chance Among 15 Candidates.

James M. Kelley of Ward 20 is one of the likely candidates for a Democratic nomination for the House of Representatives in the Twentieth District. There are fifteen candidates for the three nominations to which the district is entitled.

Mr. Kelley is prominent in social and fraternal organizations and is now chairman of the Committee on Laws of the United Workmen.

CHAPTER I.

The New Filene Store

Old Store Policies Unchanged Except as They Are Amplified

WHEN a man moves upward a niche in the scheme of social and economic endeavor his friends are apt to look around for reasons.

An unwritten law of progression is that he who progresses must let the world into the secret of his going forward.

As with the individual so with the house of business. Instinctively the public that has made progress possible feels possessed of the right to look over the charts—to view whence that house has come and thus see whither it is going.

Whatever we may have to say regarding transition from the old Filene store to the new will spring from realization that our public wants to know and has a right to know.

The story of it all is simple enough. Two words tell it: scientific specialization.

This has proceeded along three lines—

Right treatment of those who make up our organization.

Many stores attempt all of these things now and then.

This store does all of these things all of the time.

We have come to view the function of distribution as a social service of highest order, equal in importance just now with the function of production. And that spells revolution in merchandising ethics.

We believe that in large measure the present high cost of living is traceable to neglect of scientific treatment of the distribution problem—the problem of absolutely economic selling under happiest possible conditions for all concerned with that selling.

In the new store we shall have greater scope for application of this theory. Our friends will find it applied in many new and helpful ways. But in three prime essentials:

Larger and more diversified stocks—

Better values—

Better service.

Through the years of our business development we have studied this problem intensely.

Not only from the standpoint of the store itself—rather from the standpoints of selling force and consuming public.

All changes in the way of amplication will be in the interest of better merchandising. This applies to the automatic bargain basement as well as to upstairs departments.

One distinct line of expansion will be the clothing and outfitting of men and boys.

Other new departments include millinery, jewelry, leather goods, toilet goods, luggage, women's and men's shoes.

Many public-service features will be provided, among them a Marconi wireless station for transmission of day and night messages. The wireless maritime news will be bulletined promptly for the benefit of our customers.

Those who have become acquainted with present store methods will recognize them as amplified in the new.

Those who, because of crowded conditions or for other reasons, have not been frequenters of the old store will encounter many delightful surprises.

Soon we shall bid both old and new friends come.

From day to day the details of our plans will be set forth here.

BEACH MUST FACE TRIAL IN SOUTH

Attorney General of South Carolina Offers to Aid in Prosecution.

AIKEN, S. C., Aug. 17.—Robert S. Gunter, prosecuting attorney of Aiken County, declares that Fred Beach will be placed on trial and that a jury of twelve Aiken citizens will declare his guilt or innocence of the charge brought against him by the Aiken authorities—assault and battery with intent to kill his wife, with whom he was in London when informed of the warrant for his arrest and with whom he returned a few days later from Paris to New York.

Solicitor Gunter said at the June term the Grand Jury returned a true bill against Beach and that the case is set for trial at the September term of court.

"I cannot say at this time, however, whether I will call the case in September," he added. "It may have to go over until the February term, in that event it will have been a year since the enactment of the near-tragedy."

Mr. Gunter said there are five or six murder cases to be tried at the September term. It is customary also to clear the jail before jail cases are called.

Daniel S. Henderson, chief of Beach's Aiken counsel, is now in Europe. He will return to Aiken this month. Mr. Gunter said that if Mr. Henderson insists that the case be brought up in September it will be placed on the court calendar, but will not be called unless the machinery of the court shall grind fast enough to reach it in the regular order before adjournment.

Asked about a report that Mr. Beach intended to prosecute his prosecutors, Mr. Gunter said:

"The shoe is on the other foot. We are going after him."

Who's Most Eligible Bachelor in Boston? Why, It's Samuel Hooper-Hooper, to Be Sure

SAMUEL HOOPER-HOOPER

Man of Means, of Good Family, an Elegant Dancer—All That Could Be Desired

Tennis and Racquet Club in Back Bay, where Samuel Hooper-Hooper Lives.

"WHO is the most eligible bachelor in Boston?"

This question was asked of the Society Editor of the Sunday AMERICAN and right away quick she responded.

"Why, Samuel Hooper-Hooper, to be sure."

"And your reasons?"

"He is fairly young, not bad looking, has lots of money, a fine pedigree, good manners and is a perfectly elegant dancer. What more could any girl desire?"

That is how S. Hooper-Hooper came to get into the spotlight of eligibility.

The AMERICAN had undertaken to find the most eligible bachelor in Boston. He had to be a man of means, a bride, who was Boston's richest girl, and who had inherited the estate of her grandfather, Frederick L. Ames, amounting to several millions. Her father, Robert C. Hooper, is a brother of Samuel Hooper-Hooper. A sister of Hooper-Hooper is Mrs. Grafton Minot, and he is related to many other members of the elite.

So much for his family. In appearance Mr. Hooper is slender, rather tall with slight stoop, caused, it is reported, by stooping down to talk to buds. His nose is aquiline, his eyes are pale blue and his hair brown. His voice is well modulated and pleasant and his conversation is flostscence.

When he walks he is graceful as becomes a cotillion leader, and his clothes are the last word from Bond street, which is in London. Mr. Hooper-Hooper's occupation is not arduous. He visits a certain safe deposit vault every few days and spends a few tedious hours cutting coupons.

His habitat is the Tennis and Racquet Club on Boylston street, where he lives during the most of the year, but he goes abroad for several months each Summer and spends some time visiting friends and relatives on the North Shore, Newport and elsewhere. He belongs to the Eastern Yacht Club and yachts a little. He plays tennis very well.

Occasionally he visits the Somerset Club, of which he is a member, and the Racquet Club of New York. He may be seen dining at the Touraine, the Lenox and other hotels occasionally, but usually spends his evenings at residences on Beacon street and Commonwealth avenue.

He is a member of the Bachelors' Club, whose motto is "Don't Give Up," and which gives a dinner every year, followed by a dance. There are fifty Boston society men in it, but most of them are young things of twenty-five or thirty, like Robert Winsor, Jr., who are likely to desert at any time.

Mr. S. Hooper-Hooper is called in Back Bay circles the "debutantes' delight," because he is very kind to the little girls who are just breaking in.

Is Still Heart-Free.

At the opera and the Winter dances he is inevitable, and no party is held without his receiving an invitation. He is wonderful at inventing new figures for a cotillion, and he has the quaintest ideas for favors. His assistance is frequently asked about dressing a table. In fact, Mr. Hooper-Hooper, to quote a young matron who once attended his class for debutantes, is "just the dearest thing."

During the past week Mr. Hooper-Hooper was at Wareham with the Codmans, when he was called upon by a reporter and asked for news of matrimony. He was quite peeved and said he did not care to discuss such a matter.

The reporter gathered that Mr. Hooper-Hooper was single because he wished to be, and if he wished to marry he would do so, and the whole matter was strictly private.

Has Escaped Five Darts.

Various men prominent in business and social life were considered, but the investigator after several days' hard work came back to the man that the society editor had instantly selected, Samuel Hooper-Hooper.

When we discovered that he was known in the younger set as "Hyphenated Hooper" we were positive we had not made a mistake. There is hope for men who have nicknames.

Samuel Hooper-Hooper is forty years old, more or less. For close to twenty years he has escaped the snows of matrimonially determined maidens, and the traps of designing mothers. He is an expert dodger.

From the point of view of eligibility he would do for any Boston maiden, no matter how blue her blood, for he is related to the Ames, the Minots, the Amorys and other old Boston families.

S. Hooper-Hooper ought to have a wife. Boston society matrons have failed to capture him, and it's time that the pretty girls who are not in society should have a chance. It is the open season on S. Hooper-Hooper.

Not long ago, one lovely returned to him as the Harry Leb. of Boston. That is not fair to S. Hooper-Hooper. Like Harry Lehr, he is cotillion, favor-distributed favors, was attentive to "ends" and extremely useful to hostesses; but he never made love, and dinner nor carried a lady's handbag on his arm.

Why the Double Name.

Mr. S. Hooper-Hooper is a gentleman. Harry Lehr used to be a wine agent; but Mr. Hooper-Hooper has never entered trade, he never needed to.

But why Hooper-Hooper? Why not just plain Hooper? There is no established rule for the double name and hyphen. Most people whose names are known as Smith are only half Smith and half Smith, the other half of them are Jones or Green or whatever family their mothers came from.

Mr. Hooper-Hooper is Hooper clean through. His mother was a Hooper and his father was a Hooper, and this causes him to use the double name and the hyphen.

The Hoopers are not the oldest family in Boston, but they are old enough, and they have intermarried with the most ancient stock until the present generation of Hoopers have the bluest blood in Boston in their veins.

'PEGGY' LOVE WRITES TO MARSHAL MACK

Haverhill Police Head Refuses to Reveal Contents of the Chorus Girl's Note.

City Marshal John J. Mack of Haverhill received a letter yesterday from "Peggy" Love, the pretty chorus girl who is accused of the sensational shooting in the private office of Thomas Nickerson, recently manager of the Haverhill Gas Light Company, that she is coming to Haverhill to talk her case over with the marshal.

This letter was written on stationery of the Hotel Caverly, near Broadway and Forty-seventh street, New York city. It was mailed at the Times Square postal station Friday night, and was brought to the Marshal in yesterday morning's delivery. The marshal refused to reveal its purport.

"Peggy," or Margaret Love, whose right name is Miss Margaret Travers, knows, the Marshal thinks, that he has a warrant for her arrest on a charge of carrying a concealed weapon. But even if Miss Travers does not know about the warrant, it is thought that this would not deter her from coming to Haverhill through fear of arrest.

Dared Marshal Twice.

Twice before, when she intruded on the home of Mr. Nickerson in Arlington street in Haverhill and the marshal was called, she dared him to arrest her.

Miss Travers accused estimated by a spirit of "I want to tell it all" or something like that, according to police accounts of her trips there, previous to the "shooting."

Marshal Mack will probably arrest Miss Travers the moment he or one of his men finds her in the city. The police of Boston and other cities have been requested to arrest her on sight.

Albert L. Bartlett, Commissioner of Public Safety in Haverhill, has declared that the case shall be pushed clear through.

Strong efforts were made by Nickerson and his friends from the first to keep the case out of the courts. Miss Travers was allowed, after the "shooting" to leave Nickerson's office, though a policeman was on the scene. Judge John J. Winn, Nickerson's counsel, has denied that the revolver was pointed at any one, which would lead to weaken any accusation of "assault with intent to kill."

Judge Winn has made an authoritative statement that "Peggy Love" (Margaret Travers), is the woman in the case. City Marshal Mack heard that some other woman was the one. The marshal put it squarely up to Judge Winn. The latter said:

"Marshal, it was no one else than your old friend, 'Peggy Love.'"

Also Wrote to Nickerson.

Miss Travers also wrote letters Friday to Mr. Nickerson and to George M. G. Nichols, former City Solicitor of Haverhill and close friend of Nickerson. Both men were out of town. Mr. Nickerson is in New York City to see Miss Phyllis Sherwood, the actress, to whom he is engaged. He left for New York last night. He previously wired Miss Sherwood, who is at the Hotel Richmond, New York, that he would explain everything and that the newspapers' stories of the shooting was exaggerated.

Mr. Nickerson has been succeeded as manager of the Haverhill Gas Light Company by Frank M. Roberts of the Fall River Gas Company. It is understood that Mr. Nickerson will be transferred to Fall River.

AT 83 RIDES WITH HOUNDS.

Lord Portman Recalls Days of Cocked Hat Campaigning.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—Lord Portman, who has vast estates in London, and whose Dorset seat is at Bryanstone, has just completed his eighty-third year, and still rides with the hounds and takes an active interest in political and municipal matters.

He entered Parliament in 1852, at the age of twenty-three, as member for Shaftesbury, and sat and voted with the liberal party. Subsequently he was "family interest" borough with about 600 electors, and Lord Portman was not called upon to contest it.

When he represented Dorset he had one fight. "The three elected candidates," says Lord Portman, "had each to put on a cocked hat and a sword, and after the declaration of the poll we had to ride down, three abreast, Dorchester to the town pump and back again." This was his last and only contest for Parliament.

He was returned again and again until 1885, when the country was divided into four constituencies and he did not stand.

Makes Love by Mail, Wins Girl on Sight

Now Clifford Forman is Returning West With Bride From Springfield.

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 17.—Having taken a 3,500-mile chance that he might be acceptable in the eyes of Miss Ethel Mae Sturgis, of this city, as a husband, Clifford C. Forman of Orting, Washington, is now returning home with his bride.

Mrs. Forman is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Franklin W. Sturgis of the Harvard apartments on State street.

She heard of Forman through a matrimonial agency. They corresponded for some time. Forman desired to marry but would not get a promise from Miss Sturgis. The most she would agree to was that she would marry him if she liked his appearance after she had seen him.

Forman felt himself to be fully up to all the modest specifications he had forwarded. He came across the country and "made good," so to speak, on sight.

The marriage was performed Thursday at the home of the bride's parents.

W. E. COREY FOR WILSON.

Former Steel Head Favors Real Progressive.

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—William Ellis Corey, formerly head of the Steel Corporation, arrived here from Europe today on board the French liner France, and immediately declared himself in favor of the candidacy of Woodrow Wilson for President. "I have no use for Colonel Roosevelt. Wilson is a progressive and the hope of the majority of the people," he said. The steel magnate was not accompanied by his wife. Mabelle Gilman Corey, the former actress.

PLAN TO BREAK UP DEADLOCK ON TARIFF

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—Senator Newlands of Nevada today introduced a resolution for the appointment of a joint commission of three Senators and three Representatives to confer with President Taft in the endeavor to reconcile differences between the President and Congress on tariff matters.

Senator Newlands cited the present apparently hopeless deadlock with the Chief Executive and the Republicans demanding tariff reduction on a protection basis and the Democrats fighting for a tariff for revenue only.

Senator Root asserted that the question opened by the Newlands resolution is well worth acting on. He declared that the government is face to face with the weakest point in its system, and argued that the government should not be conducted by one body and legislation made by another.

Senator Lodge said the resolution is unusual, and read a message that President Madison sent to the Senate on July 6, 1813, declining to confer with a Senate committee and holding that the President can deal only with the House and Senate.

He also called attention to the attempt made by President Washington to attend Senate hearings at the time the Indian treaties were being drawn and Washington's remark on leaving the Chamber, that he "would be damned if he ever went there again."

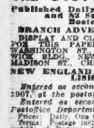
Constant Danger of Plague.



The bubonic plague keeps spreading over the earth. Scarcely a year from time to time passes without reports of its having got the latest point in Liverpool, England, the health authorities have now gotten under way with what they claim that very well as those in New York, Newark, Paterson, Jersey City, Trenton, etc., are pouring into this country. Our ports receive from China and other Asiatic countries where the plague is a common occurrence, over a year the bacteria of the bubonic plague germ, which is found in the sputum of victims of the disease, and which, to the naked eye, looks like a microscopic dot, is multiplying in the face of the great danger which people incur from having these germs.

As the chief source of infection of the dread disease is from the sputum from which the germs become infected, it is easily understood how a few infected rats got into the country, and how they could start a fire which, if not fought with a supply of the deadly germ, hurled or wafted until this country, as Dr. Martin has stated, the great epidemic of 1900 in San Francisco, that a serious outbreak of plague in this country is due more to our good fortune rather than any action on our part to prevent it.

All over this country rats and mice are regarded with a spirit of tolerance which is astonishing, in the face of the great danger which people incur from having these animals.

SAY POLICE SERVE AS BILL COLLECTORS

Complaint Made That Some of Them Act as Agents for Private Concerns.

There was much surprise in the Boston police department last night, following complaints that patrolmen have been acting as agents for private business concerns to collect bills from poor families in the tenement districts. It is charged that the practice has become quite common in South Boston, and that it prevails in other police districts.

When Commissioner Stephen O'Meara was asked about the alleged violation of the police rules, he said: "I cannot talk about this. It is nothing that I wish to talk about."

O'Meara is stopping at the Oceanic House, Kennebunkport. He was communicated with over the long distance telephone.

Violates Rules, Says Evans.

Captain Thomas Evans of the City Point station admitted that it was contrary to the rules and regulations of the department for patrolmen to collect bills for any firm.

Specific instances are given. A woman names a patrolman who collected a bill for glass, broken by her sons. Another tells of a patrolman collecting for a gallon of ice cream.

Patrolman Emmons F. Winslow of the City Point station, it is said, collected pay for a large window broken in the building of the Isaac M'Lean Sons Company at No. 392 Dorchester street. The pane was shattered by a baseball.

Winslow is said to have admitted that he secured $1.50 from Mrs. Margaret McCabe, of No. 194 Ninth street, South Boston, the mother of nine children; 65 cents from Mrs. Mary Dalrymple, of No. 36 Newman street, South Boston, a widow with six children to support; 65 cents from Mrs. Michael Addison of No. 40 Newman street, the mother of six children; 65 cents from Mrs. Katherine Holder of No. 13 Newman street, and 65 cents from Mrs. Helen McGee, a widow and the mother of seven children, and living at No. 9 Clover court.

Other women said they had been approached by Winslow, but had refused to pay him a penny.

Woman Gets Receipt.

Winslow is said to have turned the money over to the McLean Company, and to have got receipts which he gave to the women who paid up. One receipt reads:

Boston, August 13, 1912.

Received of Mrs. Addison sixty-five cents on account of glass broken by M. D. Addison.

(signed) Isaac McLean Sons Co.
S.S.—— J. A. McLean.

"It seems that I had to pay a double amount to Mr. Winslow," said Mrs. McCabe. "He came to my house and told me I would have to pay, saying he had heard my boy was the one who had broken the window. He said some of the families could not afford to pay, anyway, and that I would have to help make up their share of the expense. He said I must pay him $1.30 or he would bring my boy into court.

"I became frightened, and he was rather gruff, so I paid him the money he wanted. He gave me the receipt."

Similar statements were made by the other women.

George McLean, treasurer of the McLean company admitted the police had collected the money to pay for the broken window.

Woman's News Tip Won $50 "Scooped" Town on Accident

MISS SHERER AND HER $50 PRIZE CHECK.

Miss Theresa Sherer Saw Accident, Phoned to American and Won Cash.

Miss Theresa Sherer of No. 6 Howell street, Dorchester, wins the fifty-dollar cash prize offered by the Sunday AMERICAN for the best "live news" tip of the week.

Miss Sherer's news tip was in regard to the accident to the South Braintree local train from Boston Friday afternoon.

She saw the accident from her window. The AMERICAN'S prize offer "flashed"—to use Miss Sherer's own word—through her mind.

With the speed of a trained reporter Miss Sherer ran to the nearest telephone, called the AMERICAN and "tipped" the paper off on the news of the accident.

As a result of Miss Sherer's tip the AMERICAN had a paper out with an account of the accident an hour before any other paper did. There was extra interest—which Miss Sherer realized at the time—in the fact that the fatal wreck to the Colonial express occurred at almost the same spot a week ago.

This tip was, therefore, one such as a "live" reporter would send in, truthfully, quickly and intelligently.

Miss Sherer wins the fifty dollars by her quick wit. The AMERICAN secured the story, and what is to the point, secured it FIRST.

The AMERICAN is always ready to pay cash for good "live" news tips. It does not always, of course, pay $50 for a tip, but it pays according to the value of the story. The $50 in this case, was the amount specified for the best "live" news tip during the competition period.

For the benefit of readers who wish to know how to send in a news tip, the AMERICAN gives Miss Sherer's own story, as follows:

By MISS THERESA SHERER.

I was sitting at my window and happened to look over toward the railroad tracks where the ill-fated train of cars left the rails last week and killed several persons. I saw an out-bound train standing on the same spot with a crowd around it. The night before I read the AMERICAN'S offer of $50 to the person sending in the best news tip. That flashed in my mind.

Running to the street—for I live with my folks on the third floor of the house—I hurried to the nearest telephone, which was in Mrs. Scully's store on Dorchester avenue. I hunted up the AMERICAN'S telephone number. I couldn't find it quick enough and called "Information."

I finally got "Information," the telephone operator, and said, "Give me the AMERICAN office, quick!" She gave it to me so quickly that I was surprised. The AMERICAN operator put the city editor on the line. I told him that I thought there was another accident in the same place on the railroad bed of the New Haven road off Dorchester avenue. That was all I said.

Shortly after that I had occasion to ride in town and was surprised to hear the newsboys yelling "Extra! Extra! All about the railroad accident in South Boston." I bought a paper and saw that my tip about the accident had been first, and that once again the AMERICAN was the first on the street with an account of the affair.

GETS GEN. CUSTER RELICS.

Widow Gives Collection to National Museum.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 17.—An interesting collection recently has been installed in the Hall of History in the National Museum, consisting of articles donated and lent by Mrs. Custer, widow of General George A. Custer.

General Custer is probably best remembered by his record as an Indian scout. The collection includes a memento of this phase of his career, in the form of the white buckskin coat in which he has been most often pictured as a plainsman and scout.

This coat is in excellent condition, and looks as if the general had just removed it and hung it up. It has deep collar and cuffs, and is heavily fringed with slashed buckskin trimmings. This coat calls to mind the services General Custer rendered the government in the campaign against the Sioux in 1875 and 1876, in the last of which, the battle of the Little Big Horn, he met his death.

'I THOUGHT HIM DEAD,' SAYS MRS. WOODBURY

Double Wife Asserts She Had Been Assured First Husband Had Died.

Mrs. Elizabeth T. Beals Woodbury, the young wife who is being sued for divorce by her second husband, Milton A. Woodbury, and who has a suit for divorce filed on her own account against her first husband, Charles A. Beals of Philippsdale, R. I., says that she firmly believed that Beals was dead when she married Woodbury.

It was reported yesterday that Beals, who has been separated from his wife for seventeen years, is anxious to return to her and to their son. But Mrs. Beals, or Mrs. Woodbury as she is now known, seeks complete freedom from him.

At her home, No. 250 Dudley street, Mrs. Woodbury says: "I wish to set myself right before everyone. Mr. Woodbury knew all the facts in the case, just as well as I did, and felt satisfied that no improper step was being taken at the time of our marriage.

"When he proposed marriage to me several years ago, I did not wish to accept him until I felt absolutely certain that there would be no trouble. I had his lawyer, John L. Dyer, through an investigation, endeavor to find out what had become of Mr. Beals.

"He was traced from one place to another, in Massachusetts, Maine, Vermont and Rhode Island, where at the time no further trace of him could be obtained. I was given every assurance that he was dead.

"I thought it best to telephone Mr. Dyer and ask him to renew the investigation for absolute certainty. But I was commanded by Mr. Woodbury not to do anything further.

MAYOR HAS NEW PLAN TO CUT LIVING COST

Mayor Fitzgerald has another plan for reducing the high cost of living. His first plan was for municipal markets. His latest plan is to have the city arrange for the shipment of produce to the market in Boston, to be sold at private sales or auction.

"Stations could be erected along different trolley lines, where farmers could bring their goods for shipment to the market place in Boston," said the Mayor, "and the city arrange for these goods to be sold at private auction to the middle class at a minimum cost to both producer and consumer.

"I intend to talk with representatives of different organizations interested in the reduction of the cost of food stuffs, and will ask the labor organizations, the members of the Consumers' League and other persons interested in the public welfare to take an interest in this problem, and to aid in developing it to the best possible advantage.

"Boston was foremost in establishing a municipal printing plant, which today, is among the best in the country. Its playgrounds, baths and other municipal institutions devoted to advancing the best interests of all its people are striking evidence of what can be done in the right way."

Real Slayer of Vallon, Accuse

Rosenthal May Be Set Free Immune as State Witness

Defence Plans to Show That Plotters Intended to Kidnap Slain Gambler.

NEW YORK, Aug. 17.—Cornered and fighting for his life, as a representative of the system which is alleged to control the underworld of New York, Police Lieutenant Becker will try to fasten the crime of murder on one of the State's witnesses, when the lieutenant is brought to trial for the killing of Herman Rosenthal.

The man selected by the defence as the one who fired the two bullets into Gambler Rosenthal's brain is Harry Vallon. Vallon has been before the Grand Jury as a witness for the District Attorney. Therefore, no matter how clearly it may be shown that Vallon killed Rosenthal, he cannot be prosecuted for the crime. If Becker's defence holds good with the murder trial jury the real slayer of the gambler will go unpunished, and it is believed that the jury which acquits Becker of the murder charge will be slow to convict him of having been the graft master of the Tenderloin.

Planned to Kidnap Gambler.

Lieutenant Becker will set forth that the so-called gray murder car was in front of the Hotel Metropole on the night of Rosenthal's murder, but that it was there, not with intent to kill, but to kidnap Rosenthal. Vallon was one of the gang of kidnappers. But when Rosenthal appeared, according to the Becker defence, an old grudge came to the mind of Vallon, who admits he was very drunk, and he shot the gambler dead. The four gunmen, two in custody and two still fugitives, had nothing to do with the shooting, according to the defence, beyond being witnesses to it.

Becker will disclaim all connection with the kidnapping, alleging that a certain clique of gamblers who were "sore" at Rosenthal, made up the plot to kidnap him and witnesses will be brought forward to swear to these statements. The claim that one man killed Rosenthal is substantiated by the testimony of Coroner's Physician Otto Schultze before the Grand Jury. He swore that Rosenthal was shot only twice; that both shots entered the head and that both were of the same calibre if not from the same revolver.

These stories of Becker's defense, coupled with persistent reports that Sam Schepps, now in Buffalo, will not tell what he knows in aid of the prosecution, have disturbed District Attorney Whitman. He believes the stories of Rose, Vallon and Webber of the murder plot, but he is taking no chances that some representative of the system shall get to Schepps and "frame up" a story for him to tell. The district attorney will meet Schepps at Yarrytown Sunday afternoon or Monday morning and has ordered that the little gambler be taken off the train at that place.

Mayor Gaynor Scored.

Mayor Gaynor was accused today of putting obstacles in the way of the investigators of graft conditions here by Chairman Hinman of the Aldermanic investigating committee.

"The present Mayor is a disgrace to the city," said Mr. Curran, "and Police Commissioner Waldo's efforts at doing something are rather belated. But the Mayor is the man who is putting the real obstacles in the path of the investigations, and what makes it much worse is the artful way in which he wears a semblance of assisting us in every way possible."

Harry Vallon, state witness in prosecution of the Rosenthal case, who, according to the defence of Lieutenant Becker, fired shots that killed gambler

Bishop Lawrence for More Navy Chaplains

Bishop Lawrence of the Episcopal diocese of Massachusetts is indignant that there are no more chaplains in the navy than there were in 1842.

He has just begun a campaign in his own church against the small number of the chaplains in the navy, and wants all the churches in the land to get interested in the movement.

"Why, there has been no increase in the number of chaplains of the navy since 1842. Whose fault is it?" asks the bishop.

"I say that the fault is first with the churches.

"We talk a great deal about Christian unity coming through a common service of all the churches. I know of no service in which all the churches and all the missionary boards can more effectively join than in a demand upon Congress that the number of the chaplains shall be increased and the conditions so changed as to bring into the navy the finest and best leadership that there is in the churches."

SCHEPPS HAS DAY OF SIGHT-SEEING AT NIAGARA FALLS

BUFFALO, N. Y., Aug. 17.—Sam Schepps, at present the central figure in the Rosenthal murder inquiry, who arrived here last night en route from Hot Springs, Ark., to New York, was the guest of Assistant District Attorney Rubin and two detectives on a sightseeing trip to Niagara Falls today.

Mr. Rubin and the detectives are reticent, and Schepps varies his program from absolute silence to veiled references to the Rosenthal case, with occasional sallies of humor and reminders to the newspaper men that he has issued "no authorized statement" since the party left Hot Springs.

Schepps again today gave evidence of the reputation for fastidiousness that he has acquired since he was taken captive. The officers humored the prisoner in his vanities today, which ranged from a manicure in his room to a new suit of clothing.

This is Schepps' second visit in Buffalo since the shooting of Rosenthal.

BIG SPORTS PROGRAM FOR HULL GALA DAY

Committee Working to Make Record Event of Celebration August 24.

Plans for Hull Gala Day, the big day of the season for the Summer residents of the Nantasket colony, which is to be celebrated Saturday, August 24, are fast getting into shape. Nightly meetings are held, and the executive committee, with W. F. A. Fitzgerald as chairman, is giving Lieutenant Cornelius J. Murphy, the president of the Hull Gala Day Celebration every assistance to make the day the biggest success in the history of the association. All the expenses of the celebration are met by voluntary subscriptions.

The "Gala Day Celebration" was instituted in 1908. The program this year will be adapted especially for the entertainment of the children, and will include running races, water sports, field sports and baseball games for children between the ages of five and sixteen years. Souvenirs will be furnished to all subscribers and their children. There will also be a Punch and Judy show, vaudeville entertainment, and refreshments for the younger children. Spectacular swimming, diving and life-saving exhibitions will be given and there will be baseball games between some of the best semi-professional teams in the State.

Band concerts will be given at various places during the day, and the celebration will close with a grand display of fine fireworks and general illumination from Bicknell's pier at Bayside. The officers and members of the executive committee are:

Lieutenant Cornelius J. Murphy, president; James A. Gallivan, vice-president; George J. Doolan, vice-president; Max Mitchell, treasurer; Josiah C. Bring, secretary; Thomas H. Beaton, W. F. A. Fitzgerald, chairman; Lieutenant Cornelius J. Murphy, Walter Fenwick, Walter Brady, R. P. Bechtel.

DEMAND FOR OPERA SEATS.

General Public Showing Increased Interest.

August has, so far, proved a record month for subscriptions to season tickets for the coming season of grand opera at the Boston Opera House. As the vacation season draws to a close the general public is evincing anxiety to become subscribers for next season. Mail orders are coming in from all parts of the country and even from Europe.

The public is taking advantage of the present reduced season ticket prices and the 25 per cent. deposit privilege, which enables one to secure their seats for the season without returning to the city to do so. The box office is open daily from 10 a. m. to 9 p. m.

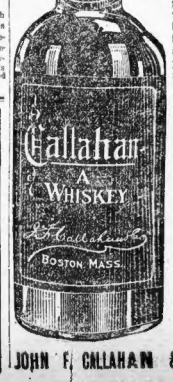
LEADS COUNTER SALES AS WELL AS MAIL ORDERS

Ask for This Brand At Your Favorite Bar or Bottle Store



We feel that we cannot lay too much stress on the fact that our customers in the most remote parts of New England buy through our mail order catalog EXACTLY THE SAME GOODS that citizens of Boston buy over our counters and AT EXACTLY THE SAME PRICES. CALLAHAN "A" WHISKEY, our mail order leader, is the most conspicuously displayed of any brand in our model store. Our trade on this brand is larger than on any other because Callahan "A" is the whiskey that suits the average taste in New England and because the price is right. Buy it over the counter and you get the biggest money's worth in the world at 4 full quarts for $3.00; 6 full quarts for $4.50, and 8 full quarts for $6.00. Buy it through the mail and you get exactly the same pure, palatable whiskey and at precisely the same price. If you order 4 quarts or more we pay the express for you. And the express charges do not come out of the quality of the whiskey. Counter customers learn with surprise that they get no reduction when they take home their four quarts instead of asking us to deliver for them. But having once tried CALLAHAN "A" whiskey, any customer can see that he is getting the value and will understand that in prepaying the reasonable express charges on New England mail orders we are simply going to a little extra expense to increase our number of sales. CALLAHAN "A" whiskey, once introduced, sells over and over again and establishes CALLAHAN QUALITY in territory from which our mail order catalog draws new business. We gladly pay express charges and are proud to guarantee money back to every disappointed purchaser. "Father Must Go to Congress" Miss Creamer May Take Stump

ELIZABETH CREAMER.

According to Miss Elizabeth C. Creamer of Lynn, there is simply nothing to it but "Father" in the Congressional situation in the new Seventh District.

"Father" is Walter H. Creamer and he is a candidate for the Democratic Congressional nomination.

"Father MUST win," says Miss Creamer, who is of twenty-five years and feminine determination.

"If it is necessary," says she, "I will make a house-to-house canvass or go on the stump. Father must win. I believe that every girl should take an active part in public affairs. While in the Sacred Heart Convent at Montreal I became interested in American and Canadian politics. Now that my father is looking for Congressional honors, I am more interested than ever."

The idea of a candidate's daughter making a house-to-house canvass may not strike the average young man as such a bad idea at that. Suppose he is interested in the candidate's daughter. He wouldn't tell her he was going to vote for her father. She would merely mark him as "safe" on her voting list and pay all her attention to the opposition.

The shrewd young man who wishes to gain the attention of said daughter, will tell her he thinks he ought to vote for the other fellow. Then the daughter will canvass his home earnestly and to can enjoy himself hearing her argue for his vote.

Miss Creamer lives at No. 4 Prescott road, Lynn. She is one of the leaders in the younger social set in the Shoe City. At the convent school in Montreal she was noted as an athlete. After graduation she made a European tour, on which she viewed the Isle of Wight, where the headquarters of the Sacred Order of the Catholic sisters is located.

MORISON HONORED AS SEASON CLOSES

Successful Stock Company Leader Presented Medallion Made by Hugh Cairns.

The Summer season of the Lindsay Morison Stock Company was brought to a close last night at the Majestic Theatre.

The big feature of the evening was the presentation to Mr. Morison of a medallion of himself by Hugh Cairns, the noted Boston sculptor. Mr. Cairns made the medallion himself, and those who saw it pronounced it a perfect likeness of Mr. Morison.

The presentation was made by Francis H. Appleton, who recently had the direction of being presented to and photographed with the King of England on the recent visit of the Arideni and Honorables to London. Mr. Appleton spoke in glowing terms of the advancement in stock productions from year to year and how Boston should feel very proud of a man such as Mr. Lindsay Morison, who insists on adding new features each season.

Miss O'Neill made her farewell bow, and was forced to make a speech, as did Mr. Hanrell and several members of the company, this closing the most successful season of stock productions that Mr. Morison has ever had.

WHY

Has $230,000 Been Spent to Find the Missing Russell Heir When the Will Does Not DEMAND That the Estate Be Divided?---The Will Reads:

My son Daniel Blake Russell left home some twelve years since, and if he should return and prove his identity at any time within twenty years after my decease, it is my earnest wish, request, and hope that my son William will share with Daniel, equally and justly whatever of my estate he may hold at the time Daniel returns, if within twenty years as above stated.

Although Dakota Dan Has Exhausted His Funds of $30,000 in Famous Will Fight, He Will Be Unable to Get a Cent, Even if He Should Win Unless William C. Russell Volunteers.

By BERT FORD.

DAKOTA DAN

FRESNO DAN

THERE is a great big, glaring WHY in the Russell will case, the second hearing of which has been suspended until September 16, after several lively weeks and overflow attendances before Master Gilbert A. A. Povey at the East Cambridge courthouse.

It is such a persistent and active WHY that it flares up no matter from what angle you may view the muddle, and hits you right between the eyes.

It is such a baffling WHY that even those conversant with every detail and development in the identity puzzle are left in greater doubt the more they strive to solve the affair.

Contemplation and analysis invariably lead back to the mental signpost, WHY, from which the student of the case started his thinking processes.

Real Mental Marathon.

It furnishes the most gruelling kind of a mental marathon and the uphill course is strewn with little WHYs which create the big WHY that loses at the baffled thinker at the scorching goal.

Here are a few of the component queries that make up the major interrogatory:

WHY did those in charge of the half million fortune of the late Senator Daniel Russell of Malden spend what is estimated to range anywhere from $150,000 to $200,000 to defeat Dakota Dan if, as they admit, and counsel for the other side are forced to acknowledge, the will does not compel the elder son and co-executor, William C. Russell, to share with the younger brother who had been lost to the family twenty-five years?

WHY all the expense, worry and trouble and the protracted court proceedings if the provision relative to the missing Daniel Blake Russell left it optional with the older son to give the younger son even as much as a penny?

WHY did the executors, William C. Russell and Ferdinand B. Almy, arrange to give Fresno Dan, the claimant from the vineyards of California, found and accepted as the lost Daniel Blake Russell after all the evidence had been submitted in the Probate Court for Dakota Dan, a fixed sum of $10 a week instead of a lump appropriation from the estate?

WHY did not the executors ask the Supreme Court for a construction or interpretation of the old Senator's will so far as the provision for the lost son was concerned?

WHY did not Fresno Dan demand a certain share outright instead of weekly allowance?

WHY, if he is a fraud, as those in charge of the estate allege, did the original claimant from the plains of Dakota return a second time and renew his struggle for a name and fortune, after suffering defeat in the Middlesex Probate Court?

WHY did he spend $30,000, all he had, as he asserts, to get a slice of a fortune, title to which was doubtful at the start?

WHY did he venture twice to face possible prosecution if found to be an imposter?

WHY wasn't one adverse decision enough?

WHY is it that if one claimant is a fraud, as MUST be the case, or if both are frauds, something cannot be unearthed about their true past history?

WHY did both masquerade under false names?

WHY and WHY! some more.

IT'S a veritable conflict of WHYS.

That is what makes the Russell identity puzzle a classic among court cases. It literally drips with doubt.

A man who has followed the case from its inception nearly two years ago remarked yesterday:

Doubt Grows and Grows.

"One day I think Dakota Dan is the right man, the next I think Fresno Dan is, and on the third—if I continue to ponder—I invariably wind up by doubting both and wondering where I'm at. This double Dan affair has got my goat."

If those in close touch with the contest are in doubt, how about the thousands who have followed the proceedings at long distance through the columns of the newspapers?

It may astonish the supporters of Dakota Dan to learn that even if he won, after all his fighting and expense for five years, and the sacrifice of a fortune piled up by the laborious efforts of years on a ranch, that he could not get a dollar!

True, nevertheless!

Just read for yourself the clause pertaining to the missing Daniel Blake Russell in Senator Russell's will. It follows:

My son, Daniel Blake Russell, left home some twelve years since, and if he should return and prove his identity at any time within twenty years after my decease it is my earnest wish, request and hope that my son William will share with Daniel, equally and justly, whatever of my estate he may hold at the time Daniel returns, if within twenty years, as above stated.

Those words, "It is my earnest wish, request and hope that William will share with Daniel," are the crux of the case.

[illegible] that the executor of the estate [illegible] as his sentiments are [illegible] by the phrase "it is my earnest wish, request and hope" that he will share with Daniel, or [illegible] son to share with the latter 50 per cent, should he return within the [illegible] period of years.

There is nothing mandatory about the provision. It leaves it to the generosity of William. The father simply expressed the "hope" and "wish" and left it at that. [illegible] NOT DEMAND division between the boys.

Those in charge of the [illegible] Russell estate at once recognized this loophole which has been held in reserve as a seventh hour ammunition.

Attorney Eugene C. Upton, of counsel for the estate, was asked yesterday why the executors did not resort for this clause and deny that any claimant and may title to a share of the estate [illegible] William C. Russell felt disposed to hold it. He will not be asked about other WHYS relating to this case, which appear earlier in this article. Said Mr. Upton:

Mr. Upton Tells Why.

"Our side doesn't feel it necessary to resort to this clause in the will. We simply contended Dakota Dan's claim because we considered that he was not the legal son and heir of Daniel Russell and not the missing Daniel Blake Russell.

"The two executors and their counsel considered that the Dakotan had no more right to come in and claim a share of the fortune than some native of Sulu. Therefore we have fought him off, and will continue to do so.

"For the same reason we did not [illegible] suggested [illegible] provision or construction of the will. Attorney Sheldon petitioned for a construction on behalf of Dakota Dan, but Judge Braley ruled some time ago that he was not entitled to have it, saying that it was first necessary for the petitioner to establish his identity and title. That would have to come first; hence our mode of procedure and failure to set forth this defence.

"Why have the executors spent so much to combat Dakota Dan? Well, because principle and truth were at stake. They knew he was not genuine and assumed the defensive.

No, I cannot estimate exactly how much has been spent to [illegible] fight and incidentals. You may state that all that counsel deemed necessary to meet the issues has been expended and no more.

"No, I cannot state how much of the estate remains. Fresno Dan was brought into the case and accepted as the long-lost Daniel Blake Russell because William C. Russell recognized him as his brother. We took upon him as the legal son and heir, and there can be no countenance any other claimant. So far as I know, Fresno Dan has not yet received any fixed sum other than the weekly payments. Dakota Dan has no standing in this case.

Came to Aid "Brother."

Fresno Dan has testified that his sole motive in coming East to establish his identity was to save his brother and the others in charge of the estate from possible trouble or prosecution. He admitted under cross-examination that $10 a week was scarcely enough to keep him. In interviews out of court he has expressed deep concern about the size of the estate and wondered if there would be anything left for him or share "after the lawyers get through," as he put it. This would seem to indicate that he expected some share later on if things are decided to his satisfaction.

Dakota Dan, brusque and breezy, declares that he is fighting for something more than money.

"It's for a name and birthright," said he. "My wife either married Daniel Blake Russell or she didn't. If she didn't I want to find out who I really am and what my name ought to be. This is as eager as I am to prove my identity, not for the money that is in it so much as title to name and blood.

"That's why I'm head-over-heels in this court battle. It means everything to me. Would a faker be apt to come back a second time after one kick? Would he spend all he owned to prove his birthright for the sake of his mother and his wife? Let them take me before the Grand Jury if they like. Let them jail me if they think I'm a fraud and scapegoat. I'm right here. I'm not running away. Daniel Blake Russell is going to come into his own if he has to fight until the crack of doom.

Why Simpson Dropped Out.

Senator Simpson dropped out of this case simply because he couldn't afford the time and money to go through another long drawn-out hearing. He had to leave his other business go to the dogs for a year. He told me he would like to defend me this time and to show that he is still interested he has supplied my new counsel, Mr. Scharton, with a number of tips and new scraps of evidence. Only a few weeks ago Senator Simpson sent us the names of two or three men in Dakota who told him they knew Dan's wife, like notes and notarized [illegible] signature, Daniel Blake [illegible] dates long before [illegible] father's death or will.

"These facts are forthcoming we shall have to go content with merely getting these documents and depositions, because it would cost a lot to bring the men on here from the West and keep them here.

Attorney William R. Scharton, senior counsel for Dakota Dan, says:

"I came into this affair without expecting a fee, because Dakota Dan is strapped. If we win I may get something and if we don't I shall be out my time and money. This case takes about all of my time. I have had to sacrifice my general practice at great cost, but I have taken a personal interest in it and am going to attain every fibre to win.

"My client is not Daniel Blake Russell. We're going to prove it. Furthermore, I'm going to [illegible] of the claims I have got up in court. There's a 'nigger in the woodpile' and I propose to smoke him out."

The Russell fortune amounted to $471,248.03 in October, 1908, when the last inventory was filed in the Middlesex Probate Court. Of this amount $401,600 was in real estate and $160,648.03 in personal property, including gilt-edge securities. Since the will was executed two years ago, two mortgages have been taken out on the estate No. 1-3 Fremont street, Boston, the most valuable parcel of realty in the Russell property. One mortgage was for $30,000 and the last for $150,000.

Big Naval War Game in Full Course Now

Battleship Fleet Sails to Attack Massachusetts Coast Towns and Fortifications.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 17.—The big naval war game for Uncle Sam's great fighting machines is on. Before Monday several of the crack ships of the navy will be theoretically sunk or several towns and cities along the Atlantic seaboard will be laid in waste.

Today the battleships Utah, Florida, Delaware, Kansas and Louisiana, under command of Rear Admiral Hugo Osterhaus sailed for Hampton Roads. Fourteen torpedo boats under command of Captain E. W. Eberle acted as escorts to the big ships and during the trip to Hampton Roads will act as the defending fleet. Upon the arrival of the fleet off the Virginia coast the destroyers will defend the coast.

At the same time the battleships New Jersey, Rhode Island, Missouri and Ohio, under command of Rear Admiral Cameron Winslow sailed for Rockport. This fleet will attack the Massachusetts coast towns. The defending fleet will consist of the battleships [illegible] a fleet of torpedo boats and [illegible] submarine and other craft.

Asks Holyoke Mayor to Find Him a Wife

Missouri Man Says He Has Heard of Beauty of Paper City's Girls and Wants One.

HOLYOKE, Aug. 17.—"Holyoke is famous for its beautiful women. I want one," is the substance of a letter received today by Mayor John J. White, from J. E. Hughner of Butler, Mo.

Mayor White smiled and after reading the letter several times decided to give it to the newspapers.

"The fellow has remarkable judgment! No man ought to go out of the city for a wife. I will help him out," said the Mayor.

He is very particular about weight, complexion and age. This is what he says:

I am a railroad man and going West. I want to take along a help mate. Holyoke girls are famous for their beauty.

I want one, but she must be a brunette, weigh not more than 130 pounds and her age must not be over [illegible]. Please help me find one [illegible] meet the requirements.

Fight Over Tax on Smith Dormitories

Northampton Council Seeks Compromise on $2,000,000 College Property.

NORTHAMPTON, Aug. 17.—Must Smith college be made to pay taxes on the $2,000,000 worth of untaxed property?

Smith College says "No."

Northampton citizens say, "Yes, by all means."

And so there is being started a fight which may lead to a renewal of the [illegible] to the Legislature to have all colleges pay taxes on every bit of land that is not used solely for educational purposes.

The Northampton city council has already appointed a committee to seek a compromise with the college trustees on the [illegible] of taxing Smith and [illegible] The argument that institutions are taxable when they are not used directly for the education of the Smith girls.

Friends of the college point to the institution bringing 1,600 girls to Northampton's floating population during the college year, that the college hears more than words can tell to the city and that the property should not be taxed anyway.

Even MORE Than the Usual November Increase

Is Practically Certain to Result in the Price of Furs

The strike of the Fur Workers in New York (the centre of the Fur Industry in the United States) has resulted in almost no production for the last 9 weeks. Thus (even if the strike ends at once—which is not likely) means a shortage later and higher prices. So—in addition to the normal November increase—a further increase is practically certain.

For years the Filene August Sale of New Furs has grown in volume because of our customers' confidence in our guarantee of savings and the fact that our predictions have been verified. This year—these savings seem absolutely certain to be larger than ever.

Need we say more?

2nd Week of the Filene August Sale of New Furs

At 20% to 33⅓% Below Next November's Prices

We pledge our aims to save you money if you buy Furs this week

Terms of Sale

Furs bought during this sale will be stored and insured by us, free of charge until November 1st (if not called for before the purchaser). No deposit is required. Payment to be made or charge be put through to accounts November 1st—unless delivered prior to that date.

The 5 Guarantees

1. We guarantee a saving of 20% to 33 1-3%.

2. We guarantee that every piece of fur is new.

3. We guarantee the quality of every piece of fur

4. We guarantee the correctness of the style.

5. We guarantee the quality of finish and workmanship.

Gov. Pothier Going to Bottom of R. I. Prison Labor Scandal

"Convict Slave Trust" Scared, Offers to Cancel Shirt Contract

State Aroused, Wants to Know Who Has Been Getting Graft

HOW CONVICTS MAKE GARMENTS, AND A TYPICAL AMERICAN PENITENTIARY

Scene showing how prisoners are employed in Rhode Island State prison at Cranston

POTHIER INTENDS PRISONS SHALL BE FREE OF GRAFTING

I read your article upon our prison here and thought it excellent. I assure you I want our prisons to be as well managed and as free from graft as any in the world. It is my intention that they shall be so

The State Board of Control and Supply is going right after things, and I have every confidence in it. It is my board. It was appointed to clear up just such things as is being cleared up by it. I want it understood that I am behind this board and shall back it up to the best of my ability.

On the question of our convicts making shirts I cannot talk with authority. It is a long established custom in Rhode Island, but if it is wrong. It must be changed.

NEW SHIPS FOR BOSTON WHEN CANAL OPENS

Crowley Company to Build Two Giant Colliers; Two More Fruit Liners.

MODEL CRAFT PLANNED

Hub Capital to Take Prominent Part in Developing American Traffic.

THAT Boston capital will play the leading part in the development of American shipping following the opening of the Panama Canal, was made apparent yesterday by an important announcement by the officials of the Coastwise Transportation Company

John Crowley, managing owner of the company, which is the largest coal carrying concern in the East announced that the company would soon build two 10,000-ton colliers which would ply between Atlantic coal ports and Honolulu. The cost of these craft will exceed $1,000,000.

New Fruit Liners.

Hardly had this important bit of news spread through the shipping and financial circles before the United Fruit Company made a similar announcement that it would in a few weeks place in its Boston service two new 8,000-ton passenger carrying ships

Although Boston capital will build the two new colliers (one to be named after them as her own the company, though, announces that the Middlesex, a 7,600-ton collier will within ten days be launched at Camden N J This ship will make Boston her home port sailing between here and North Carolina ports. She has been chartered by the New Haven Railroad for five years

The United Fruit Company boats are the Tenadores and the Chamaxico. They are the last word in marine construction They will ply between this port and the West Indies. It is intimated that with the opening of the canal one of the boats fitted for first class passengers will be pressed into service and stop at Port Limon, a hundred miles distant from the canal The new fruit boats have cabin accommodations for 250 passengers each

Built the Lawson.

The Coastwise Transportation is the first steamship corporation in the city to make preparations for utilizing the canal It is the concern which for years operated the big fleet of Crowley schooners in the coal carrying trade The company built the seven masted schooner Thomas W. Lawson which was lost off the Irish coast

Quincy's Record as a Rearer of Yankees

Five Hundred Perambulators Last Year! Let All New England Take Notice!

Quincy-on-Fore-River, like the stout patriotic and historic old town that she is, is nobly doing her duty by the cause of the nation's progress

Quincy, home of two of our presidents, does not believe in mere pink-tea or afternoon resolution patriotism. She believes in the practical patriotism of the nursery

No depending by Quincy on immigration to swell her census. She believes in the home product. And she has the goods to prove it

With in the past year, FIVE HUNDRED baby carriages were sold in Quincy!

There's an answer to race suicide clamors, which even the mushy Theodore might memorize

Half a thousand native born Yankees whose first sight of the sun was under the Stars and Stripes! How can they do otherwise than love and defend it?

Half-a-thousand Quincyites, all of whom let us hope, will have the born right to vote when they are twenty-one

Down there in peaceful, thrifty unobtrusive Quincy, they are teaching a lesson to all the rest of New England, all the rest of America. Increase the native stock, keep on increasing it; roll the baby carriage figures up into the thousands fill the parks with their tousle-headed occupants on days of sunshine

Have we many more Quincy's in New England? If so, let us hear from them.

For their's will be a glittering story

Says Molecule Is Making Men Better

Professor Euchen of Jena Avers Men Are Being Driven Back to Religion By It.

Men! You're going to be better!

Oh! She don't say much about it A molecule is going to do the business

It's so, because Professor Rudolf Euchen of the University of Jena says so. He will be exchange professor at Harvard University this coming college year, and will arrive in Boston some time in October

His conclusions in the Harvard Theological Review in the current issue have excited discussion among the theologians in Harvard.

"Men are going to be better There is something driving them back to religion. What is it?" asks the professor.

"There are molecular transformations taking place, that is to say, there is a molecule around. It is not seen at first, but it is growing bigger all the time It will eventually burst upon our view, and it will show that men are getting better It will necessarily provoke essential changes in the entire conditions of life

"A man can bear much hindrance and hurt and not lose his courage, but he cannot endure to have his whole life aimless and meaningless."

ROSE PITONOF WILL LEAD CHANNEL DERBY

Boston Girl; Lilly Smith, of England, and 4 Men to Attempt Feat.

LONDON Aug. 17.—Rose Pitonof, of Boston will have strenuous competition in her effort to swim the English Channel In fact there is to be a regular Channel derby as soon as the boat tides come the latter part of this month, and, besides the Boston girl, Lilly Smith, the champion English girl swimmer, and four men will attempt to equal the feat of Webb and Burgess. The men are Jack Weldman, who accompanied Burgess on his 1911 swim; Ted Heaton, of Liverpool; Jabez Wolfe, who nearly got there, and Fred Record

The delay caused by unfavorable tide conditions has not been disadvantageous to Miss Pitonof, as it has thus given her a better chance to get acquainted with the treacherous Channel currents. She is swimming daily off Dover and has the benefit of being accompanied by other aspirants

Arrangements are now being made for a long swim of particularly interesting character between Miss Pitonof and Lilly Smith, which will be in the nature of practice for the Channel swim. It will be a twenty-mile swim.

Miss Pitonof is creating by far the greatest interest of any of the aspirants She has an American flag in her sitting room, which she declares she will plant in the sands of France between Calais and Gris Nez. She is now swimming gamely and is full of confidence. All she says is:

"I guess I'll get as far as anybody. I have been splashing around for two miles or so every day and training hard enough The favorite among the men is Jack Weldman. He holds the Burgess medal given those who accompanied the champion, and looks forward cheerfully to the day when his own profile will be struck in silver

All the swimmers have completed their arrangements for departure, each having hooked a tug and selected a party. The cost of the trip, including training, is about $700

It is expected that, after the recent heavy storms, the weather will turn very favorable after the neap tides appear, but all the swimmers declare that when they start there will be no pace for the Channel.

Warden McCusker When Asked About Contract With Sterling Manufacturing Co and Making of Shirts at 2½ Cents Apiece, Only Says, "I Don't Care to Talk." but State Government Gets Busy

GOVERNOR POTHIER has stepped into the investigation of Rhode Island's prison labor contract.

He is determined that the Board of Control shall conduct a thorough inquiry into the reasons that have led to the making of shirts in Cranston State Prison for the Sterling Manufacturing Company of Chicago at a contract price of two and one-half cents each

He is determined that it shall be shown why the Board of Charities and Corrections paid out to the prisoners money belonging to the State under a clever profit-sharing plan devised by Warden John F. McClusker to "speed up" the prisoners to turn out a greater number of shirts

He is determined that Rhode Island's convicts shall not be employed under a contract which provides that the State of Rhode Island shall receive 29 cents a dozen for shirts, while other states are receiving from 65 to 85 cents for the same kind of work.

He is determined that Rhode Island convict labor shall not be exploited unfairly in competition with free labor.

In an exclusive interview with the Sunday AMERICAN he commends the newspaper for its exposition of the facts last Sunday and declares he will back the Board of Control which is digging into the matter despite the protests of the politicians

"It is my board," declared the Governor. "Its members know what they are about. They will get to the bottom of the the affair."

The Sterling Manufacturing Company, alarmed by the publicity given their methods, have written, offering to abrogate their contract, thus hoping to hush things up, but the date of abrogation is set for July 31, 1913.

Politicians are showing great activity in the inquiry. Some have been declaring that the next Legislature will clip the wings of the impertinent Board of Control. Governor Pothier's determined attitude is likely to prevent any such thing being done.

Governor Pothier said to an AMERICAN representative:

"I read your article upon our prison here and thought it excellent. I assure you I want our prisons to be as well managed and as free from graft as any in the world. It is my intention that they shall be so.

"The State Board of Control and Supply is going right after things and I have every confidence in it. It is my board. It was appointed to clear up just such things as is being cleared up by it. I want it understood that I am behind this board and shall back it up to the best of my ability.

"On the question of the employment of our convicts at making shirts I cannot talk with authority. It is a long-established custom in Rhode Island, but if it is wrong it must be changed.

"The Board of Control is investigating the whole matter and I am content with whatever it decides. I will say, however, that if we do make shirts in our prison the State should receive as high a

WILL GRAFT SLAYER'S EYES ON BLIND MAN

Doctors to Remove Corneas as Soon as Murderer's Life Is Extinct.

ATLANTA, Ga., Aug. 17—If the optic nerves of John Cashin, a blind newspaper vendor of this city, retain their [illegible] power, he will be seeing through the eyes of a murderer soon

Robert L. [illegible] convicted of killing his wife, is to be executed here As soon as the execution has been completed Clay's eyes will be removed, placed in a saline solution and rushed to a hospital, where Cashin will be waiting for the most delicate of all surgical operations—the grafting of the corneas into his own eyes.

Dr. J. N Ellis a specialist, and Dr Ebbert Cullen a noted oculist, have agreed that the operation probably will be successful. It originated the idea as blazing as any of Poe's, in his own mind, when was alleged to have [illegible] just after he came had been [illegible] from the jury wheel. The Judge [illegible] thoughtfully and carefully to [illegible] list of persons given [illegible] of immunity from [illegible] not—as an accident.

DARROW FOUND NOT GUILTY OF THE CHARGE OF JURY BRIBING

Remarkable Scene Follows the Acquittal of Noted Lawyer, Who Gives Way to Tears as the Verdict Is Announced

Judge Hutton, Who Presided at Long Trial, Presses Forward to Offer Congratulations; Jury Out 31 Minutes

"I Shall Devote Rest of My Life Serving the Poor," Says Darrow in Statement; Another Indictment Is Still Pending

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Aug. 17—Clarence S. Darrow was today acquitted of the charge of jury bribery. After a trial that had lasted since early in May, the famous advocate for the cause of union labor was freed from charges growing out of the sensational ending of the trial of James B. McNamara, confessed slayer of twenty one persons.

After months spent in taking testimony, and days of argument, during which Darrow played a prominent part both as witness and counsel in his own defence, the jurors today brought in a verdict of not guilty.

In a court room packed to suffocation, while hundreds more tried to crowd in the final scene of the great drama was staged. Judge Hutton was the principal. His instructions to the jury ended the final legal procedure before the case was given into the hands of the men who have listened for months to the endless number of witnesses, the bickerings of the attorneys and the final battle of words over the guilt or innocence of the man who defended the McNamaras.

Statement by Darrow.

Later Darrow gave out the following statement.

It has been a long ordeal, and of course I have a great sense of relief at its close. None of those who knew me ever believed that I was corrupt and their encouragement and faith has been my greatest help in the trial

The excitement and the prosecution could not have happened except under the tense excitement and strain of the dramatic close of the McNamara case.

I shall spend the rest of my life as I have that which has passed, in doing the best I can to serve the cause of the poor.

Asserting that the evidence developed in the case of Darrow does not support the allegation of bribing a jury, a legal in the [illegible] of the indictment against him, Judge Hutton read his instructions to the [illegible] He instructed the jurors that they could consider only the second count, that of attempting to influence a man drawn for jury service.

Judge Hutton, in his crisp, legal manner, reading from typewritten pages that had been carefully revised, swept away the first count against Darrow, that of bribing juror Robert N. Bain, (Gaspar Hoyt), who, after being sworn in the McNamara case, admitted that his wife had accepted $400 of [illegible] for him to vote for acquittal. Then the judge, in precise phraseology of the law attacked the mass of testimony that had been piled up for the State.

Franklin Discredited.

Franklin's story he said could not be credited, even though it was believed, unless other testimony corroborating it directly connected Darrow with the other count in the indictment

The second charge was attempt to influence a man drawn for jury service. It referred to the case of [illegible] and which was alleged to [illegible] juror just after he came had been [illegible] from the jury wheel. (This Is the Winning Editorial in the Sunday AMERICAN'S Contest)

By LUCRETIA XAVIER FLOYD.

[Lucretia Xavier Floyd is a writer of prominence on educational matters. She at one time taught in private schools and later was a teacher at Wellesley. She lives at Belmont Hall, No. 119 Mt. Auburn street.]

WHY should we find it necessary to RUSH THROUGH LIFE!

In this country of ceaseless activity and constant progress it is the tendency to try to outspeed our fellow man.

He who lags will find himself buffeted by the moving crowd.

We all seem to be trying to outspeed everyone else. We work longer and longer hours. We speed about in mile-a-minute trains. We drive automobiles at terrific speed.

We cannot seem to GO FAST enough.

Is all this necessary?

Does the progress of the world demand it?

* * *

While the person of INDOMITABLE WILL and a DETERMINATION TO SUCCEED is to be highly commended, he should not succeed at the expense of his fellows.

It is time that the SURVIVAL OF THE FITTEST in life's battle should be mellowed by more modern methods of conservation of energy and life.

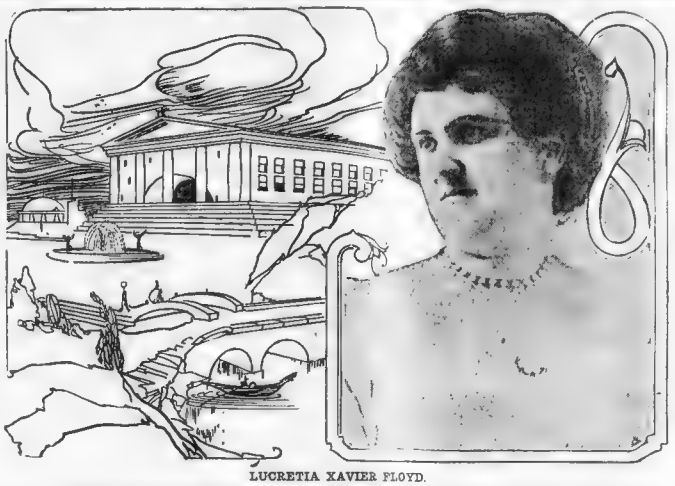
The STEADY GOING, CONSISTENT individual is likely to surpass the more impetuous in LASTING ACHIEVEMENTS. The SLOW PLODDER calmly may overcome obstacles one by one which the speed-imbued person could never surmount.

For SPEED, health and pleasure is often sacrificed in the mad whirl of business or politics. The business men of today find but little time for recreation or, to remember the duty they owe to THEMSELVES.

* * *

PAUSE!

Our existence upon this earth, even when covering the longest period, is short if compared with ETERNITY, and we should endeavor to PROLONG IT.



LUCRETIA XAVIER FLOYD.

No country has so many accidental deaths as the United States.

If we rush through life, not even allowing the proper time for eating, outraged nature will take its revenge and the seeds be sown of many functional derangements that will shorten life.

The CONSTANT RUSH at railroad terminals and in subways, the reckless driving of vehicles demands a heavy toll in human life.

It is neither necessary nor right to go through life without considering the ill-effects of our haste upon ourselves and others.

More people suffer from cardiac trouble here than anywhere else.

The strongest heart cannot always stand the strain of modern speed.

Exercise is one of the best things for most of us, but it must be taken in a proper manner or it defeats its own ends.

Foreigners from small towns of the Old World, upon landing in New York gaze with wonder at the mad rush and whirl of that great metropolis.

In their own countries such rushing around could only be caused by some great catastrophe.

But soon these, too, begin to emulate American haste and bustle.

Seeing them in their own country leisurely walking the streets one cannot help contrasting the change after they have lived here a short time.

* * *

The ceaseless activity and energy displayed here would be impossible in certain countries. Complete exhaustion and even death might be the penalty.

This would be the case particularly in the tropics, where even those who do not labor sleep the "siesta."

Consider the case of Cuba. Many of the natives of that Queen of the Antilles came to Harvard during the Summer of 1909.

The ladies in their own country walk in slow, graceful manner

How they would feel after a shopping excursion in Boston on a Bargain Day!

At first they took life leisurely, and in Boston were jostled and bumped by more active pedestrians.

But there was a decided change later. They caught the rush habit, and the sight of some of the Cuban women teachers, not only hurrying, but actually running for a car was most amusing.

Picture the sensation they would create in Cuba by such activities.

Why should we hurry?

Shattered nerves and impaired health are often the result.

At times hurry is necessary, but a ceaseless rush is neither necessary nor desirable.

We cannot take the fruits of our labor with us to the other world, and we should not risk our lives or health to gain what others will enjoy when we pass on.

Above all, WE SHOULD CONSIDER OUR FELLOWS.

Resolve to win YOUR success without trampling upon the weaker, those weaker than yourself.

THERE IS ROOM FOR US ALL.

There is a SPEED limit for EVERYBODY. Do not EXCEED YOURS.

NEARLY ONE THOUSAND EDITORIALS BY THE PEOPLE

Nearly one thousand editorials from the people were received in the Sunday AMERICAN'S editorial contest.

Scores of these were of great merit, and the work of the Editorial Contest Editor in selecting the editorial which in his judgment was superior in thought to all others was indeed no easy task.

These editorials covered a wide range of subjects, testifying to the diversified tastes and interests of Sunday AMERICAN readers.

The editorial published herewith was finally decided upon by the editors as best deserving the $50 prize, and a check for that amount will be sent to the author, Mrs. Lucretia Xavier Floyd of 119 Mt. Auburn street, Cambridge.

Among the more notable editorials received and which the editor of the Sunday AMERICAN hopes he may be able to publish at some future date are articles from the following:

Autopiano

Taken by the Chas. S. Norris Co. in Exchange for the Famous
The World's Most Wonderful Player-Piano

THE Autopiano

The Autopiano unites in a single instrument a high-class upright, which can be played with the hands (the old way), and the player-piano, which is played with the perforated piano music roll (the new way), thus enabling anyone, young or old, to render in a finished manner any musical composition. The construction of the Autopiano is most durable, and, unlike others, who use rubber tubes in construction—in the Autopiano lead tubes are used and are indestructible. Its sweet tone is unequalled.

A great many people have in their homes what is practically a "dead piano." No one knows how to play it—son and daughter who used to play and entertain the family have married and the piano is now merely an expensive ornament. Now is the time to get an Autopiano—put in the music roll, start it—that's all you have to do . . . play for you (without any knowledge of music or playing on your part) the world's greatest music, new and old. All opera and popular music prepared for the Autopiano as soon as published.

THEY ENDORSE THE AUTOPIANO

Luisa Tetrazzini Praises Auto-Piano

The Autopiano is a blessing to humanity. It should be in every home, for it brings with it the greatest entertainment which only the composers of the great masters afford. I find I can . . . my great operas with the same feeling and expression with which I sang them. I love to . . . the Autopiano. It is a perfect player piano to equal it.

LUISA TETRAZZINI.

Mary Young, Boston Actress, and Her Autopiano.

THE PRE-EMINENCE OF THE AUTOPIANO AT THE VATICAN
Is confirmed by the recent bestowal of THE ORDER OF ST. SYLVESTER
—BY—

HIS HOLINESS POPE PIUS X.

Upon Mr. Charles Kohler as founder of the Autopiano Company. The order of St. Sylvester is one of the three highest orders of Papal Knighthood that may be conferred upon laymen. In conferring the order the decree states that His Holiness bestows this special honor and dignity in recognition of the splendid ingenuity and skill displayed in producing a player piano such pictures as the Autopiano. Following, as this does, the gold medal awards of His Holiness to the Autopiano Company in 1908, the position of pre-eminence that THE AUTOPIANO occupies in the Vatican is unmistakable.

PIANO BARGAINS
PIANO BARGAINS

We have a number of pianos, taken in exchange for the Autopiano, which must be disposed of at once. They have been carefully overhauled in our own workrooms and are in the best of condition.

Terms so reasonable that you cannot afford to miss this opportunity to buy a splendid piano. See us before your purchase.

VALUES THAT BAFFLE THE ADVERTISER'S VOCABULARY

It isn't safe to judge of our values by the prices. Trade triumphs bring us brilliant chances. Take the items quoted below. Gracefulness, strength, beauty and wear-resisting qualities. It isn't a fraud to give you 85c worth of Pongee for 49c—if we really do it.
And how about $4.50 Silks at $2.19? And 85c Natural Shantung at 69c?

Perhaps some one says, "sane retailers don't sell $1.00 Imported Chiffon Taffeta at 65c." It depends. If an importer or manufacturer is hard pressed and anxious to realize cash through our distributing power—you are the gainer—if you buy. Such sacrifices ought not to be made. However, circumstances occasionally impose them. For example:

Black Messaline Silk—There is plenty of mean Messaline—but not here. The worth of this is every whit as much as when the price was 39c a yard; special now..... 29c

Messaline, 19 inches wide, fast edge; white, black and colors. Where else can you get such Messaline for dress, waist or lining for less than 65c a yard; our price..... 45c

Imported Changeable Taffeta, 20 inches wide. Exquisite chiffon finish. Warp and woof both pure silk. Not safe to wait if you want any. Worth $1.00 a yard; special at 65c

Black Crepe de Chine, 24 inches wide. A sprightly, lively stuff. That's Crepe de China. And black has a richness and dignity that charm; worth $1.25 a yard; special... 85c

Lyons-Dyed Japanese Silk, black, white and practically all colors. Here's new dynamic power for our ever-expanding Silk Store; worth 59c to 75c a yard; special at .. 39c

Black Pongee, 27 and 35 inches wide. Weaving and dyeing that will bear looking at. Test both critically. Softness and delicacy; worth 65c; special at..... 49c

Chinese Shantung Silk, 25 inches wide, natural color. Deftly loomed by Chinese hands. That accounts for the regularity of the thread-work; worth 85c a yd.; special 69c

Black Crepe Meteor and Charmeuse. They will stand looking at, and lingering—and wear. Qualities worth up to $3.50 a yard, special..... $2.19

THE GREAT RETAIL EVENT OF AUGUST — RIBBON SALE

EXTRA SELLING SPACE AND ADDITIONAL SALESPEOPLE

Just one year ago we held a Ribbon Sale. At about that time the Ribbon Store went under new management. Tremendous reductions were ordered. All accumulations were involved. For the past three months we have been planning to secure values that would surpass the ones offered twelve months ago. We have succeeded. But this time the losses are borne by importers and manufacturers. We are merely content to forego our usual profit.

Buy Ribbons for immediate needs; buy Ribbons for next Christmas—buy Ribbons—buy them at SHEPARD now if you wish to save money. They are as fresh as a flower garden in a setting of grain and grass fields.

No matter what sort of Ribbon may be uppermost, we have a place for all the others. The trifling "Baby" or No. 1 has as much care accordingly as the most imposing sash width.

P. S.—Black Velvet Ribbon is the kind that "goes with everything."

26,000 SEE RED SOX BEAT TIGERS IN THRILLING FINISH

With the Score 3 to 0 Against Them, Boston Makes 5 in Seventh and Wins; Athletics Lose; Senators Are Now Second

REMARKABLE PANORAMA SHOWS HOW THE RED SOX CAME FROM BEHIND AND WON—WHEN WAGNER "BROKE UP" THE GAME—SPEAKER TAKES A HAND; DRIVES STAKES WHEN CROWD OVERFLOWS

The score was 3 to 0 against the Red Sox in the seventh. Engle was on second and Gardner on third. "Heinie" Wagner drove a single to left and the two runners scored. The "broke up" the ball game. The Red Sox never stopped until they made five runs in the inning and finally won, 6 to 4, more than regaining their slight loss of Friday by taking an extra bigger lead over Washington today than they had over the Athletics Friday morning before they lost and the Athletics won. In the upper right hand corner the picture shows how the crowd swarmed onto "Duffy's Cliff" and how Tris Speaker drove the stakes that kept them off the playing field.

PILGRIMS SPLIT DOUBLE BILL WITH ST. LOUIS

Kling's Men Capture the First Game by 3 to 1; Lose the Second, 3 to 2.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 17.—With the thermometer hovering around the 100 mark the Braves broke even with the Cardinals in a double-bill, winning the first, 3 to 1, and losing the second, 3 to 2, in ten innings, although Soldier Hess outpitched Four Cardinal hurlers.

The double bill today marked Kling's final appearance of St Louis this season and it was tough luck that both games were not won, a wild throw by Rariden [illegible] double play in the ninth [illegible] Hess to score with the tieing [illegible]

A great pitching by Perdue won the first game for the Braves, while Bill Steele was hit hard. Bob Harmon gets credit for winning the second game, although he pitched only one inning.

The Braves won the opening game, 3 to 1 by beating Lush three, the local spitballer, hard in the pinches. Hub Perdue pitched good ball [illegible] in seven hits, these being apportioned to four innings, but when the final man was retired Perdue was ready to throw up the sponge.

Kling's men got after Steele right at the [illegible] Magee led off for the Cubs and went to second on Compton's sacrifice. Sweeney sent a single to center

CUBS BEAT GIANTS IN EXTRA INNINGS

By CHARLES DRYDEN.

CHICAGO, Aug. 17.—Crippled Jim Archer, with the help of his crippled pals, beat Mathewson and the Giants, 6 to 5, in the last battle of the series today. Jim did it in the eleventh inning while Matty was trying to pass him or induce the cripple to bite at a bad ball. Saier was at third and Evers at second in response to a single and double, when Archer reached out and whacked the third pitched ball for a clean, whistling line single to centre, scoring Saier.

Thus ended the hottest battle of the series and Comedian Lew Richie came out winner in two ways. After the Giants had been cleaned than-o handed his top-line comedians $100 in real money and Lew went out to get himself a goblet of soda water to cool his parched gills. It was a remarkably even battle between Lew and Big Six. Each allowed twelve hits, walked two men and fanned two. The home team had a lead of three runs to whittle down after the third. The vis-

CHICAGO WHITE SOX WIN FROM ATHLETICS

SHIBE PARK, PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 17.—The Champions let a fish get a whale, get off the hook this afternoon when they threw away a game to the White Sox and lost Eddie Collins for three days. Score: Chicago, 5; Athletics, 4.

Ed Walsh, who twirled for Chicago, was hit harder than Plank, but he had more luck. Eddie, Plank though beaten, not only pitched wonderful ball, but he fielded like a hawk and crushed out a triple and a single as well as working Walsh for a base on balls.

Umpire Sheridan made several decisions that looked like he ought to ride through Georgia again. In the fourth inning, Archer tried to steal second and snatched Lapp's peanut throw and tagged Zelder. Sheridan called Zelder safe and Collins yelled Sheridan called Collins and then sent him from the game, the [illegible] being [illegible] from the game.

The Champions scored in the first on Oldring's single and Collins' triple. The Sox pulled two runs in the second on a double by J. Collins, a single by Zelder and Barry's muff [illegible] Collins' single and a stolen base, followed by a single by Baker tied up the score again.

Singles by Baker and McInnis gave the Athletics a run in the fifth. Mattick's single and J. Collins' triple gave the Sox another run in the sixth. The Sox won in the eighth when Rath singled, Mattick sacrificed and J. Collins singled.

The Champions lost chances to score, while errors by Baker, Collins and Lapp gave the Sox a great advantage. The score:

Jennings' Crew Have 3 to 0 Lead at Opening of 'Lucky Seventh," but Stahl's Pennant Chasers Go in and Bat Out Five Lusty Runs—Score: 6-4

It takes just one inning to win a ball game for Boston. That one yesterday was "the lucky seventh" when the flying Sox fit into the cocky Detroit Tigers, knocked a three-run lead galore west, and sent 26,000 howling fans to very verge of delirious heart failure.

The final score was 6 to 4. The rally was the work of a real, dyed-in-the-wool championship ball team.

When the lid blew off, the Stahl's score, to all intents and purposes a beaten bunch. Three runs in the hole, and George M[illegible] beat is some handicap, even for a gang of world-beaters. But that's just what the Sox hewed down. The portly George, up to that [illegible] had allowed just two stings little hits.

But this did not seem to worry the locals, who were rather shaky in the field, and not going any too hard. In the sixth, the crowd began to cheer, and the noise had a most delightful effect.

When Gardner, the first man up in the seventh, watched four wide ones sizzle past, said noise increased in volume. When Engle [illegible] a base hit [illegible] rapid [illegible] the [illegible] of an [illegible] somewhat by Clyde's beautiful chase to second, while Jones was shooting the pill back in to third.

Whisper Increases to Wild Howl.

All this racket, however, was a mere whisper to the howl that bumped the clouds when brave Heinie Wagner undid a crash that shunted two red-hosed runners across the pan and put us within striking distance.

Trusty Bill Carrigan pushed his predecessor along a pat with a suicide slap, after which Henriksen, batting vice Collins, nearly tore off Mullin's hand with a smash that let him perch on the initial cushion, while Wag skidded to third.

The obese Mr. Mullin was now very much to the bad and filled the stations by walking Hooper.

Then the Sox produced a star-spangled display of base running the equal of which has not been seen in these parts for quite some time.

Ball cracked a vicious grounder toward second. Vitt knocked it down and made a reach after it, but it bounded off a shade. He dove after it, finally clutched it and got it to first just in time to put the clamps on Ball.

Meantime Wagner had counted, and Henriksen was tearing to third. Seeing Vitt doing the contortion stunt, he never hesitated, but [illegible] for the plate like an Olympic star [illegible]

Real Championship Base-Running.

Onslow saw him going, and whirled the pill to Stanage, but the speedy little sub made a beautiful scissors slide and eluded the catcher, scoring one of the most sensational runs we have ever seen for [illegible] spell.

Meantime Hooper, with his eyes open, as usual, made a [illegible] great high- [illegible],000 more [illegible] ing papers

PILGRIMS TAKE TURN AT WINNING IN ST. LOUIS SERIE

RED SOX HAVE BIG LEAD OVER SENATORS

With 8½ Games Lead, Red Sox Without Doubt Will Win the Pennant.

The Red Sox now lead the Senators, who by winning yesterday moved back into second place, by just eight and a half games, exactly the same as they were last week. While only somewhat out the task of overhauling the flying Stahlmen seems more monumental, and the pennant seems fated to come to the club, whose name has come to mean neither a supporter nor for which there is no guarantee in fact judging from the way the team shapes up.

Contrary to all supposititons, the gamey Senators refused to be put out of consideration merely because they fell down against the Browns, and took a temporary tumble into third place. Just at present, they are back on the job, equally as much to be feared by the leaders, as the Athletics.

Athletics Hit Their Gait.

The latter team seems at last to have hit its true gait. So long as Boston can continue to win four out of every two games, which they have been doing quite consistently all the way, they cannot be headed unless either the Senators or Athletics make a run of special size or the rest of the national game.

The Red Sox will play forty two games remaining in the season. It is reasonable to suppose that they will win twenty eight of them, and wind up the season with 105 won and 47 lost games. The Senators have to the left, while the Athletics have fourteen games. That is, if the Senators win thirty-one of the forty-two games on the card, they will have 104 won and fifty lost, still a game behind the flag. The Athletics, winning nine out of their forty-two games will likewise be forced to lose one. That either of these two latter teams can make such a pace is far more than likely, for the reason that they had to do it last season with the Boston record still holding to the figures quoted above.

Great Crowd Will Be There.

Wherefore it is well to begin thinking of putting in the order for that post-season trip for the grounds will not hold half the mob and much that will attempt to watch the big battles if they come here.

It is well to remember that both Navin Field and Comiskey are now making a effort to be ready to bring about a show up.

In the National League during the week the Cubs further closed the gap on the young giants, a game and a half separating the Chicagoans from the Polo grounders. A week and a half ago the difference was ten and a half games wide. It can be readily seen that if the two leaders keep up this respective rate of travel, the West Side park in Chicago will see the real scrap for the National League pennant.

And if you like the way the game is played here, it's mighty hard to see where they would fit with our American Leaguers.

PILGRIMS TAKE ONE AND LOSE ONE GAME

and McDonald counted but Bill was out trying for second. Two hits were wasted by the Braves in the second round.

The fourth inning brought the winning counts for the Pilgrims. Devlin singled, was sacrificed to second by Bridwell. Manager Kling brought him home with a double to left and counted on McDonald a one spot to the same destination. Griner, a big right-hander from Cleveland, Tenn., pitched well in the last three innings, only one hit coming off him. The only runs for the Cardinals came in the sixth on singles by Flack, Whitted and Meyer, Huggins and Magee. Outside of this one inning Griner was very effective.

Soldier Hess gave the Cardinals only five hits in the second game, but some loose fielding behind him lost the game One of these, a throw by Rariden, gave the Bridge tailor, while a few batters by Kilne, who took O'Rourke's place at short after the latter was put out of the game for arguing with Umpire Orth, put the Cards in a position to put over the deciding count.

Pilgrims Score First.

The Pilgrims were first to score, getting one off Burk in the second, on singles by Thus and Devlin and an infield out by Griner.

Evans doubled, Hauser's in out and Rariden's single in the last half. Kilne's one out on the throw to the outfield on a base on balls to McDonald, which marked Burk's finish. Salles taking up the burden. Rariden's single and Griner's fly to Mc Donald over Woodburn pitched the ninth and Herzog the final one in the inning.

Koney was hit at the start of the ninth Hauser doubled, and Bresnahan, batting for Griner, was passed. Rice Koney scored at the plate, but Rariden's throw to double the backstop hit him in the back, and a moment later he was forced out at second on an error by Kirke, Magee's sacrifice and Mowrey's single won the game for Devlin.

THOUSANDS IN RIOT AT NEW HAVEN GAME

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Aug. 17.—Umpire James Mullaney of the Connecticut League precipitated a riot in the fifth inning of today's New Haven-Bridgeport game when he punched Bobby Stow, the Bridgeport second baseman in the jaw, and when Jack Spratt, the Bridgeport shortstop, sprang at Mullaney, he knocked him down with a swinging left.

Instantly half a dozen Bridgeport players were at Mullaney's throat, but were pulled off by New Haven players and by "Cy" Hoffman, the chief of police, who followed between the players of the rival teams.

Catcher Nagle of the New Havens cut his hand by swatting the jaw of Spratt, who had regained his feet and was looking for more trouble. Fully a thousand of the spectators leaped into the infield and punching matches between the New Haven and Bridgeport rooters commenced.

One Bridgeport defender was knocked down three times, but was subdued only by being trampled upon.

Mullaney, who weighs 225 pounds and is six feet three inches tall, brushed off the attentions of players and of the police, and with the aid of the police soon cleared the field for return to the game.

After half an hour's wait the field was cleared and the game finished. Mullaney was arrested and charged with assault.

He was released under $500 bond, furnished by Thomas F. Farnsworth of the New Haven nine. Stow is held as witness. Mullaney's trial will come Monday.

SOX HAVE GREAT SECONDARY DEFENCE

SUBSTITUTES KEEP TEAM IN LEAD IN RACE FOR PENNANT

Jake Stahl Has the Greatest "Second String" of Any of the Big League Teams—Shows what They Can Do on the Field

"The real strength of a baseball team is in its substitutes."

This statement, credited to Johnny McGraw, has become one of the axioms of the national game, and Jake Stahl will probably win a pennant for Boston not only because he has the best team in the American League, but because he has the greatest "second string" of any team in the organization. In fact Stahl believes that he has the best "second string" in either league, notwithstanding McGraw's remarkable set of substitutes on the Giant bench.

The worth of these substitutes has been shown the past week, when Stahl began to inject them into the game so that his regulars might freshen up and so that the slight acquire playing experience that would equip them to step into the game if injury or other accident should deprive him of the services of any of his regulars.

Athleticcs Naturally Become 'Stale'

Playing day after day in the gruelling strain of big league leadership, athletes naturally become "stale," have minor illnesses that slow up their work or suffer actual injury. No sport is so exacting as baseball. Other sports require but a few hours' effort now and then, but the baseball player must be at it six days in the week—some seven—for six months of the year.

Such men as Tris Speaker, "Heinie" Wagner and Joe Wood have put the Red Sox out in front of the American League race, but the Red Sox could not hold that position if it did not have able men ready to jump into their places. That the Sox have such men gives the leaders confidence that the team will stay right where it is and go along as regularly as clock-work, no matter what happens to the "regulars."

Stahl has a substitute outfielder who can fill the place of either Hooper, Speaker or Lewis, his famous outfielders and play either field at least as well as the average outfielders of the teams behind the Red Sox. His name is Henriksen; the little New England League speed marvel. He has shown that the Red Sox can lose Speaker for days at a time and still win more baseball games than it will lose. Henriksen is a good hitter, a classy outfielder, who does not cover as much ground as Speaker, but who covers more than the average first division outfielder, and he is a demon on the bases.

Henriksen's specialty is beating out bunts and waiting for bases on balls. He gets away quickly, runs like a deer and usually beats anything but the cleanest and quickest fielding of his infield hits. He can also line them out on occasion, but shines particularly as a waiter and a bunter.

Clyde Engle Big Factor

The Red Sox team would not be complete without Clyde Engle. Engle is familiarly known as Hackenschmidt. He would be in the regular lineup but for his weight. He is stocky—huge in fact—but he is fast nevertheless. He has played every position in the team except put her. He can fill an outfield place and play any of the infield positions with equal skill.

Stahl had Engle at first base in the St Louis series. He was so delighted to get into the game that he slammed out a triple a double and two singles in five times at bat and gave an exhibition of quick work on the bases. It is safe to say that Engle is as valuable as any regular on the team; in fact, as valuable as ALL of them because he can substitute for any of them and play as good baseball in their places as the occupant of a similar place on most of the other teams in the league.

Then there's Neal Ball. Ball has worked for years at Cleveland. His natural position is at second base. He never had much opportunity to shine there at Cleveland, because Lajoie had the place riveted down. So Ball was finally placed on the market, and Jimmie McAleer snapped him up at a good price to complete his second string infield.

It was said that Ball could not hit well enough. Well, he never made much stir with his batting, but when the smoke had cleared away and last season's playing had been figured up, there was Ball with a percentage close to .300.

Ball Fast on Feet

Ball has been playing since Yerkes was injured in the first St. Louis game. He covers more ground to his left than Yerkes does, and otherwise fields as well as Steve. He made some remarkably brilliant plays that were reminiscent of the day some years ago when he completed a triple play, unassisted, against the Red Sox and became known as "Triple Play" Ball.

He batted with discretion, laying down some good bunts, and was a lightning performer on the bases. His speed was a revelation. He worked faster than any of the regulars. Ball can fill in at shortstop and third base, too. He used to do that for the "Naps."

Hugh Bradley is another. Hugh can catch and play first base. He substituted for Jake Stahl when Stahl was on the injured list and the Red Sox stayed right in front. Hugh began his work as a regular by driving a home run over the left field fence at the critical point of a game with the Athletics, winning the contest and being the first man to drive one over the fence. He became known as "Home Run" Bradley then and there—his initials being H. R., anyway.

Hugh has not shone as a batter since then, but he hits well enough to be able to fill in Stahl's place sufficiently well to keep up the Sox record.

Krug Is Wagner's Substitute

Last is Krug, this season's newcomer. When McAleer was in doubt as to whether "Heinie" Wagner's arm would come back, he gathered in three or four substitutes that looked promising. When "Heinie" "came back," McAleer dispensed with all of them but Krug, and this fellow is now Wagner's regular understudy. He holds a big league was all of the time, and, upon his first appearance in regular garb, set up a batting record of more than .400. He's a clouter. Krug can also play the second and third base positions.

Stahl has sent all of these men into games that were either a practical doubt or hopelessly lost and they played together as well as most first division teams do. With finish, they could carry the Red Sox through to the end of the season, and President McAleer is confident that whatever happens to his "regulars" now, his second string" can win the pennant for him.

NAT NILES WINNER IN TENNIS SINGLES

McLoughlin and Bundy Other Victors at the Meadow Club.

SOUTHAMPTON, L. I., Aug. 17.—Nathaniel W. Miles, the Massachusetts State champion, and the Pacific coast doubles champions, Maurice E. McLoughlin and Thomas C. Bundy, were respectively the winners in the singles and doubles here today in the finals on the turf lawn tennis courts of the Meadow Club. Miles met Wallace F. Johnson, the Middle States champion, a former holder of the cup here, defeating him by the score of 7—5, 6—2, 6—4.

McLoughlin and Bundy defeated William J. Clothier and George Peabody Gardner, Jr., the Eastern champions, in the final of the doubles by the score of 6—4, 6—2, 6—4. Both of the finals in the tournament, which holds the place of the preliminary round to the National All-Comers, which follows at Newport next week, were hotly contested.

Miss Olive Homer Wins at Quannapowitt Meet

WAKEFIELD, Aug. 17.—The feature of the afternoon at the Quannapowitt Gentlemen's Driving Club races was contributed by Miss Olive Homer, owned and driven by W. A. Brackett, who romped away with three straight heats from C. J. Bolton's Wildick. The horses were evenly matched, and raced neck and neck throughout the entire distance, the former winning each heat after a smashing drive through the stretch.

N. M. Gallion's Banty also showed up well, taking the best three in five heats from A. Pyles. The latter, after copping the first heat, was distanced in the next two, won the fourth and lost the fifth, and winning heat to Banty, who barely nosed out at the wire.

Three honors for the afternoon went to J. B. Wilkinson's Baraldo, who negotiated the track in 1.06. The summary:

Cardinals Buy Player.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 17.—The Cardinals have purchased a new third sacker. He is George Whited, now doing good work for the Jacksonville (South Atlantic League) club. The price paid for the recruit is said to be $3,000. He will report to the Cardinals aged the close of the South Atlantic season and in all probability will get a chance to show his worth as a big leaguer right at the start.

ORIENTS LOSE AT LAST.

Atlantics Down Winners of 19 Straight Games.

After establishing a record of nineteen victories and one defeat, the Orients of West Quincy lost to the Atlantic A. A. at Atlantic yesterday afternoon, the score being 6 to 4.

Errors on the part of the losers proved costly, and they were unable to show up to their usual advantage.

SEVEN RACES RUN AT FELLSWAY MEET

Extra Heats Necessary to Decide Winners in Several Events.

Hot finishes were the rule at the meet of the Fellsway Driving Club at Combination Park yesterday. In several events extra heats were necessary to decide the winners. Bert Parsons, who drove Big Tramp, won two fast heats from Del Iser Law's chestnut mare, in the fastest time made on the track during the meeting.

In Class F trot it took four heats to decide the winner, and a peculiar feature of this race was that Demar, Davis' bay gelding, carried off the honors after winning the first heat and then trailing the other two horses for the next two heats. He surprised the crowd by coming to the front in the fourth heat and winning in fast time.

The other extra heats were in Classes F, trot, and H, trot and pace. The summary:

TITLE TENNIS PLAY ON CASINO COURTS

NEWPORT, Aug. 17.—With a turf in exceptional condition, few grandstands to accommodate the ever-increasing galleries and an energy that has not been preceded for size in this country's lawn tennis history, the annual national championships in lawn tennis singles and doubles starts tomorrow on the turf courts of the Casino here.

There are many reasons which substantiate the belief that this tournament is to be the greatest in history. First in importance is the fact that the national championship will be decided between the two players who have stood out during the competitions and play but one match, a challenge match against the winner of "all comers." On the contrary, a man must if he wish to retain his title enter as every other player and go through the field.

Will Aid Players.

Instances are innumerable in which a challenge match has been won by a former champion or challenger who's holder due to the over played condition of his opponent, who had struggled and strived if he survived and players alike. This much is assured by the likelihood of William A. Larned's not playing in the tournament. This perfect American expert won his seventh championship last year, five of which he has won consecutively from 1907 on.

It is to be regretted that the rheumatism which played havoc with Larned during his matches for the "Davis Cup" last year has not left him, and even if he arrived at Newport the probabilities of his lasting through the tournament would be extremely doubtful.

Has Made Great Record.

Aside from the regret which all lawn tennis followers feel over the indisposition of the champion and former idol there is the keenest interest over the prospects of champion, Maurice E. McLoughlin of San Francisco. If his victories this year are any criterion, he by all means is the one player whom the prophets look upon as the coming title holder.

Maine Centrals Win.

PORTLAND, Me., Aug. 17.—Duhe, the star Holy Cross twirler pitching for the Knights of Columbus here today lost a duel with Woodbury of the Maine Central team through wretched support, 6 to 2. The largest crowd of the season saw the game.

MILE RUN FEATURE IN ROXBURY GAMES

Many athletes participated in the Roxbury meet given under the auspices of the Municipal A. A. at the Marcella street playgrounds, Roxbury, yesterday afternoon and many interesting races were run off. The race commanding the most attention was the one mile run which was won by W. V. Dorney. R. W. Smith was second and Paddon was third. The time was 5 minutes 3 3-5.

The summary:

Condrick Shows Well.

Condrick, the Weymouth youngster, who has thrown down many flatteries offers made by minor league team managers, showed his superiority over Dunn, the former New England League star, at Weymouth yesterday, and as a result Clapp Memorial defeated the Braintree White Sox by a score of 7 to 1. The features of the game were the pitching of Condrick and the base-running of Doble. The score:

	R.	H.	E.
Braintree	0 0 0 0 0 1 0 0 0—1

Men—An O-P-C

Often Doubles a Man's Capacity

Nothing else known can increase a man's energy like an O-P-C suppository.

Yet it does nothing but conserve your vitality. It stops a wicked drain on the nerve force.

This saving alone can make tired men tireless. It makes languid men alert.

It gives you the benefit of all the vim which men who don't wear it waste.

You can prove this in a week. You can be a different man in a month.

For work or play, walking or riding, every man who values energy needs an O-P-C. And you need it for comfort too.

The O-P-C is the scientific suspensory, famous for 20 years. Our book tells why you need it—what it does. Write for it now.

All druggists guarantee you satisfaction with an O-P-C. No 2, Lisle, 75c—No 3, Silk, $1.00. Mailed direct from 45 W. Twenty-Fifth Street, Chicago. If your druggist will not supply you.

The Smoking Tobacco of Our Daddies Was The Best After All.

When your grandfather wantedtosmoke he dug into his pocket for his plug of tobacco, took out his trusty old Jack-Knife, whittled off enough tobacco to fill his pipe, lit up—and as the blue smoke ascended, knew he was enjoying himself.

Then came the hurry-up age, and to make tobacco convenient for the smoker, it was granulated, sliced and shredded. But it was never as GOOD as the tobacco whittled FRESH from the plug. Some of the moisture and flavor escaped into the air, but many smokers kept on using the chopped-up kinds of tobacco, because of the convenience or because they knew no better.

When you learn to know the flavor and sweetness of REAL tobacco, you will understand why your grandfather and thousands of other wise old smokers liked to whittle off their own tobacco.

Try it for yourself and note the difference. Master Workman Plug Tobacco is made of the finest sun-dried tobacco known. Its flavor and goodness are retained because the leaves are put under tremendous pressure, squeezing the moisture in, and then protecting the flavor by Nature's own covering, a natural leaf wrapper.

Try your grandfather's smoke-method just once. It may take a minute longer, but you'll admit that it's TIME WELL SPENT.

UNION PRINTERS TO BATTLE ON DIAMOND HERE THIS WEEK

UNION PRINTERS IN BATTLE FOR TITLE

Great Baseball Series Will Be Fought Out in Boston This Week.

Preparations have been completed for the fifth annual tournament of the Boston Union Printers' Baseball Association which opens in this city tomorrow.

Members of the Union Printers' Baseball League have gathered from all parts of the country and a gala time is expected. Many of the visiting printers are accompanied by their wives and families.

In order to create a sound title competition for the Garry Herrmann trophy games have been arranged between the various teams which compose the league, and some spirited contests are looked for by the fans.

The baseball games will get under way tomorrow afternoon at 1:30 o'clock. The first game will be between Chicago and Pittsburgh and a red-hot battle is expected.

This contest will be followed by a game between Indianapolis and Philadelphia. Both of these cities are represented by strong, evenly balanced outfits and the fur is sure to fly.

The evening will be given up to pleasure. A pop concert is planned for at Hotel Brunswick.

The battle for baseball honors will be continued throughout the week. On Tuesday afternoon Cincinnati will play Washington in the first game, while St. Louis will clash with New York in the second contest.

Manchester Yachting Big Society Event

MANCHESTER-BY-THE-SEA, Aug. 17.—North Shore society turned out by the hundreds this afternoon for the annual water sports of the Manchester Yacht Club.

The boys and young men of the Summer colony, sons of millionaires, furnished amusement for several hundred smartly gowned matrons and pretty society girls.

The events were run off in the water in front of the club house at West Manchester.

The appearance of Hobb Burgess at his aerodynedoplane late in the afternoon added a spectacular feature to the program announced. Mr. Burgess circled about the harbor several times and tried to make a landing so as to take up his friend, Lt. Charles Plotts, for a ride, but so many small craft crowded the harbor that he had to return to Marblehead without stopping.

Mrs. Charles E. Cutting and Mrs. Norton Wrightington poured tea during the social half hour following the sports when the cups were awarded the winners.

Following is the summary of events:

Waking the tide, won by Charles F. Hodges, Jr.; second, Thomas Proctor; third, Harold Sturgis.

Two oared sculling race, Charles F. Hodges, Jr., and Frank Bragg against Maxwell Barrett, second.

Junior canoeing race, won by John Caswell, Jr.; Frank Parker, second.

Diving contest, won by Frank Wigglesworth; Malcolm Pierce, second.

Tub race, won by George Crocker; John Caswell, second; Gil Shaw, third.

Canoe canoe race, won by George Crocker, John Caswell, second.

Water boat ball, won by J. A. Rogers, team composed of H. Parker, J. Jackson, Gerard Swope and R. Parker, J. Jackson, Gerard Swope and R. Parker against team composed of Frank Bragg, Jr., Maxwell Barrett, Miss Marie Burgess, Miss Muriel Crocker, Frank Wigglesworth and Caswell, Jr. Score 5 to 3.

The judges were W. H. Tucker, A. Hunt, Jr., Miss Mary Chase. The race was started by Miss Mary Chase and Miss Muriel Sears fired a pistol at Francis P. Mottey.

DUXBURY YACHTS RACE.

Goodspeed's Again Easily First Over the Line.

DUXBURY, Aug. 17.—The Duxbury Yacht Club sailed a race this afternoon around the bay before a southeast breeze. The course was from the clubhouse to a spar off Kinoff's wharf, thence to High Thicy and back to the starting point, sailed over twice. The Again, Goodspeed's racer, took the lead in its class, and was not headed during the entire race.

Chandler Wins Tourney.

MANCHESTER-BY-THE-SEA, Aug. 17.—The weekly golf tournament at the Essex Country Club held today had one of the largest entry lists of the season, there being thirty-six players, but twenty-four of them did not turn in cards. The winner of the tournament was F. H. Chandler, with a net card of 73, while W. A. Stickney was an easy winner of the gross prize with 78. The summary:

E. R. Chandler, 80, 16, 73; W. A. Stickney, 78, 5, 73; A. M. Dickson, 85, 10, 75; C. K. Arnold, 90, 13, 77; F. Sears, 84, 6, 78; A. Ames, 89, 10, 79; C. A. Parker, 85, 5, 80; H. Nesbitt, 85, 10, 75; E. D. Bond, 90, 10, 80; A. Sampson, 97, 16, 81; H. Hostetter, 85, 4, 81; H. W. Arnold, 90, 10, 81; H. H. Stevens, 90, 10, 80; A. Hunt, Jr., 90, 10, 80; H. Wellington, 90, 10, 80. Girl Swimmer Star of Big Meet

Trials at Dewey Beach for Title

ALICE ELDRIDGE, THE CHARLESTOWN MERMAID

ALICE ELDRIDGE.

Miss Eldridge was the star at the Dewey Beach races, winning two firsts, two seconds and tieing in another event.

Before an interested crowd of nearly 1 000 spectators, about 150 swimmers, both boys and girls contested at Dewey Beach, Charlestown, yesterday afternoon, for the honor of representing their district in the grand final races, which will be held in the Charles River Basin next Saturday, under the auspices of the Municipal Athletic Association, and the Bath Department of the City of Boston.

Miss Alice Eldridge of No. 4 Howard place, was easily the star of the afternoon, winning two firsts, tieing for one and capturing two second places. Miss Eldridge has been swimming only a little over a year and has shown great progress and proficiency in the art.

The closest and most interesting race of the afternoon was the girls' (intermediate) 25-yard dash, which was a dead heat between Miss Eldridge and Miss Elizabeth McArdle.

The two young women will swim Monday to decide the winner in the event. The 50-yard dash was also a close contest between these two girls, the latter winning by a scant foot.

Another race which brought forth the plaudits of the spectators was the 440 yard dash for boys (senior class). It was won by William Kenedy by about five feet.

The summary:

Girls' (senior) twenty-five-yard dash (under class)—Won by Helen Connolly; second, Alice O'Donohue; third, Louise Lewis.

Girls' diving for form (junior class)—Won by Elizabeth Hennessy; second, Alice O'Donohue; third, Louise Lewis.

Girls' (senior) five-yard dash (intermediate class)—Dead heat between Alice Eldridge and Elizabeth McArdle; third, Isabelle Sexton.

Girls' diving for form (intermediate class)—Won by Alice Eldridge; second, Estelle Hall; third, Isabelle Sexton.

Girls' fifty-yard dash (intermediate class)—Won by Alice Eldridge; second, Elizabeth McArdle; third, Helen Cronin.

Girls' (senior) fifty-yard dash (open class)—Won by Elizabeth Hennessy; second, Miss Alice Eldridge; third, Miss Alice Sexton.

Girls' (senior) fifty-yard dash (open class)—Won by Miss Alice Eldridge; second, Miss Alice Sexton; third, Agnes McCarthy.

Boys' (senior) five-yard dash (junior class)—Won by Charles Fraser; second, Joseph Lyons; third, Bernard Riley.

Boys' (junior) one hundred yard dash (intermediate class)—Won by Arthur Donnelly; second, Howard Connolly; third John Greve.

Boys' one hundred-yard dash (senior class)—Won by Dennis McLaughlin; second, Edward Kolpatz; third, William Kenedy.

Senior boys' diving—Won by Richard Flanagan; second, Edward Kolpatz; third, Dennis McLaughlin.

Senior boys' fifty-yard dash (open class)—Won by Dennis McLaughlin; second, Edward Kolpatz; third, Philip O'Connell; third John Degan.

The races were conducted by Henry T. Griffin, instructor of swimming at the beach and the officials were Thomas Ever out, referee; John Hoey, clerk of course; Henry A. Higgins, starter, William Hughes, announcer; Henry Hudson, Fred Tyrrell and John Mahoney, judges.

3,000 People Cheer East Boston Swimmers

More than 3,000 people witnessed the swimming carnival of the East Boston Swimming Club, held at Wood Island Park yesterday afternoon. The shore was lined with people, while others enjoyed the races from crafts along the course.

Events were held for members as well as open events which brought out some fast swimmers.

Winthrop was the fruitful athletic and representing the Brookline swimming club, captured the second prize, being defeated in four yards open by C. J. Cook of Quincy and losing the one mile and half event, to George Meehan, Brookline Swimming Club.

Thomas H. Sullivan, of the Amherst High school, scratch man in the 440 yard open was second. First position going to Joseph Burke, who defeated Sullivan by four yards.

Isabella Lavery won the championship for girls of East Boston by defeating Alice Inanna and Josephine Driscoll in the 200-yard event.

Joseph Burke was the star winner for the club events, taking first place in the 440-yards and ½ mile events, while Fred Wagner won first in the 110-yard and 100-yards back swimming, and finished third in the 440 yard dash.

During the events music was furnished by a band on the shore and fancy swimming and diving exhibitions were given by well-known aquatics. The summary:

220 YARDS—For men who have between 15 and 18 years. Won by Hugh Gallagher; Harry Hazen, second; David Hoffman, third. Time—2m. 20s.

100 YARDS—For club members. Won by Fred Wagner, Thomas Morris, second; Edward Travers, third.

B. A. A. ATHLETES WIN WOONSOCKET MEET

Burke Beats Holden in Hard 880-Metre Race; Whitney Wins His Event.

WOONSOCKET, R. I., Aug. 17.—The star performers from the Boston A. A. took most of the honors at the British Day Olympic games held here this afternoon, the North Dorchester A. A. A. being next in line. The Cathedral C. C. and the Technical High School of Providence and the Seigel A. C. had a few winners.

Burdwick, of the B. A. A. won the 100 metres with Illsey of the same club second. The pair reversed the 220. Hugh McGuir of Woonsocket, a member of the Olympic team, took two events, and Whitney of the B. A. A. another Olympic star. Burke, of Penn., and Holden of the Olympic team, were the feature event. A parade preceded the sports and the games were attended by 3,000 people. George V. Brown, secretary of the B. A. A., was one of the judges.

AMPHIBIOUS ROADS TRY TO DEPRIVE NATION OF PANAMA CANAL BENEFITS

By W. H. ROSS.

STATE STREET, Aug. 17.—What took place in the stock market within a week was repetition. Prices rose for several successive days and were then subjected to realising, which did not appreciably change the status, although it may have scared away some outsiders who had begun to take an interest in speculation. The situation remains the same. Trading has been almost wholly professional and great financial interests are adding to their accumulations when buying is best, and otherwise letting the market move as it may. Its palpable strength is encouraging to all who expect industrial and commercial expansion.

W. H. ROSS

But that must wait, and chiefly wait upon the reaping of agricultural profits. Getting grain to market is looked forward to with apprehension. There is fear of congestion, although railroads have more cars than they had a year ago or ever had. Harvests will be so bountiful it is a question whether roads have facilities to prevent delays and blockades which will tie up millions of dollars and make things unpleasant for bankers, farmers and grain men and managers. Wise merchants in the West are getting Fall stocks delivered as soon as possible.

AMPLE CROP MOVING MONEY.

There ought to be plenty of money for harvest requisitions and a hardening of rates should not cause trepidation. Stocks speculation will not be a drain on the money market for some time to come, as any big market movement will have to wait until crops are handled and paid for and farmers have $9,000,000,000 or more to spend.

The presidential campaign in getting its attention. There is another public question before the people of far greater ultimate importance. It is what is going to be done about the Panama Canal. Railroads are as much concerned over it as there are about their immediate grain of getting farm products to market. Those [illegible] have many cars or tracks to attend to at home ought not to worry [illegible] over the canal bill which prohibits them from owning steamship lines. They can get along without them. [illegible] prospects are so good that [illegible] sympathizers in the matter. They can get along and pay dividends if the Interstate Commerce Commission does not permit the raising of rates. As for the future, the development of the country is bound to provide more business than they can attend to as they are [illegible] will prove in built [illegible] with extensions and added equipment.

Mellen Road and Boats.

It is only recently that the public has understood that some of the Eastern roads, particularly the New Haven system, are as much opposed to the Panama Canal being used for the development of American shipping as Transcontinentals. One of the [illegible] originators who have been amassed at the solicitation of Senator Brandegee of Connecticut against what they regard as vital Pacific coast interests would understand the situation better if they realized that his State is regarded in this part of the country as the Pacific terminus of the domination of the New York, New Haven & Hartford road as Calif[illegible] is ever was under that of the Southern Pacific. It is saying a good deal, but far from all that might be said.

But if the New Haven must part with railroads they will not have to be sold in a rush, and the boats the system has to [illegible] endure is its severance from a waterway monopoly which has been regarded by New England business men as necessary to its keeping rates up to the Interstate Commerce Commission has been in telling them down. With railroad territory as profitable as any Directorate could wish for, the New Haven is [illegible] to give up Long Island Sound and the boats it has to operate it took from the Old Colony and its steamship lines, and that it is widely believed also that its [illegible] as hard to develop steamboat business as did the road it gobbled up.

[illegible] yet to convince the people of the country that the New Haven's interests have [illegible] much regard for the welfare of [illegible] and Out on the Pacific [illegible] people [illegible] Southern Pacific never [illegible] as good as an [illegible] to choke off competition.

A Shock to Patriots.

It is not a pleasant spectacle for Americans to the railroads build in their country and with other money working with Great Britain to prevent their nation from reaping the most advantage it can out of the greatest public work it has ever accomplished. Much of the capital which went to lay rails in this country was made in ships which carried our flag around the world until the United States put a stop to a close second to Britain [illegible] up for the carrying trade that [illegible] from John Bull. German kingdoms were [illegible] until when Britons held contrary [illegible] state-aided [illegible] railroads to

SPENCER CALM AS HE NEARS DEATH CHAIR

Springfield "Jekyl and Hyde" Finds Aid In Christian Science.

SPRINGFIELD, Aug. 17.—During the week beginning Sunday, September 15, Bertram G. Spencer of this city will pay the penalty for killing Miss Martha B. Blackstone, a Springfield public teacher, early in the evening of March 21, 1910. While those close to Spencer say that he is resigned to his fate, his attorney, Richard F. Stapleton, has not given up the fight for his client's life. He has appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States on constitutionality. [illegible] Attorney Stapleton will probably seek executive clemency and ask that the sentence of Spencer be commuted to life imprisonment by Governor Foss and his council. The next meeting of the Governor's Council will be August 28.

Spencer has been confined to Hampden County Jail since his arrest, a few weeks after he murdered Miss Blackstone. According to the sentence imposed by Judge Crosby he will remain here until ten days before his execution, when he is to be taken to the State Prison in Charlestown.

Returning Loot.

This will bring his departure from this city about the first Wednesday in September. If custom is followed at Charlestown is Spencer's case he will probably be electrocuted soon after midnight, Monday, September 16.

Spencer received a visit from his mother, Mrs. Katherine C. Spencer of Lebanon, Ct., yesterday. It is thought the last [illegible] Mrs. Spencer will have to see her son before he goes to the chair. Neither [illegible] mother bore up well during the previous visit.

Officials at the jail say that Spencer is calmly making preparations for his death without any show of emotion. For the past month he has been resting in a cell [illegible] and can identify as taken from [illegible]. This is the residence of his mother, to whom he turned over property he had that was not taken by the police at the time of his arrest. [illegible] thing was returned [illegible] Jackson of Pittsburgh recently by Mrs. Spencer, as it was stolen from her home when Spencer first broke into a series of crimes that caused a reign of terror in Springfield for more than two years before the night.

His own personal possessions Spencer is carefully packing in a box in his cell with the intention of leaving them as gifts to young son after the execution. The child is living with his grandmother in Lebanon, Ct., and is three years old. He has not seen his father since his arrest. Spencer's wife is living in Worcester, where she is working as a stenographer to earn money to support herself and contribute to the support of her child.

Shows Big Change.

Those who knew Spencer best are marveling at the change that has come over the prisoner in the past two months. When he was arrested on July 2, a whisky and cocaine break by him was feared. With his former violence in the jail when in the court room during his trial firmly impressed on their mind, his guards were prepared for anything. They were greatly surprised at the spectators when he received his sentence without an outburst, or even a show of emotion coming when the judge said: "You shall suffer death by the passage of a current of electricity through your body." Tears came to his eyes then and he held his handkerchief before his face.

There was none of the carings, shrieks or hysterical weeping that marked his trial. Everyone was amazed at the change in the man. A reader of the local Christian Science church was allowed to visit him at his request, and from that time Spencer became a different man.

Upon six counts of crime was one of the most remarkable in criminal annals. Suddenly life he was to all intents and purposes a model young man and not one did he arouse the slightest suspicion that he was not all that he pretended to be. He liked the society of his fellows and sang in a church choir and was liked by all.

But this was another side of the man. For two years or more he terrorized the city with his daring robberies, all of which were committed early in the evening or later then 9 o'clock, so that it was said of him that he was a model husband for he never stayed out late at night.

In the midst of his crimes he wooed and married Mardie Hallowell of Lebanon, Conn., to the wishes of her parents. To all their friends they appeared happily mated, but soon after Spencer left his wife. She was then working as a bracemaker in a factory in Willimantic, Conn., and left from this city to Brattleboro, Vt. From this city he extended the field of his activities to Greenfield along the railroad which train stopped for any length of time, and when the police collected the loot at Spencer's home considerable of it was claimed by residents of Greenfield and Brattleboro.

Two little girls played an important part in the arrest of Spencer and the fastening of the murder of Miss Blackstone upon him. The first was a gold locket, a Christmas present from his wife, which contained photographs of his mother and sister. It also had his initials, "B. G. S.," on the outside.

When Spencer attempted to rob the house of Charles L. Simons at No. 60 Pelhoi street, in this city, he was discovered, but escaped, and in his flight the locket dropped from his watch chain and fell in the Simons' yard. This was his undoing.

FUNERAL OF C. D. ROONEY.

Services for Newspaper Man at Winchester Church.

Relatives, friends and newspaper associates paid tribute to the memory of Charles D. Rooney, editorial writer for the Traveler-Herald, yesterday, by attending his funeral in St. Mary's Church, Winchester. The Gregorian high mass of requiem was celebrated by the Rev. J. W. H. Corbett, pastor of the church. He was assisted by Rev. Michael Cullen of Somerville and the Rev. Jas. Hamilton Richards, S. J., of New York. Miss Margaret Merritt was organist.

The pall bearers were Robert Lincoln O'Brien, John Connolly and Rodney Walsh of the Herald, Thomas M. Dupuis, M. E. O'Leary and Dr. Thomas McMahon of Winchester. Burial was in Calvary cemetery, Mont vale.

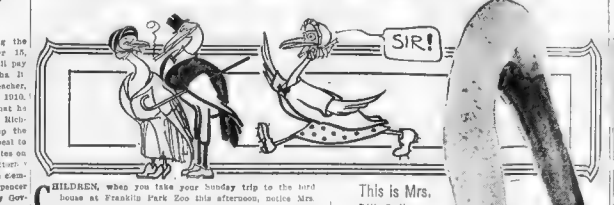
MRS. BILL PELICAN MAKES MATE REFORM

Gay Flamingo sisters, with their pink wings, win the old man away from the home side at the Zoo, thereby arousing the jealous ire of a good wife, who imitates the bad family with a lecture that shows her spouse the error of his ways and gains a promise of a big fish for today's dinner.



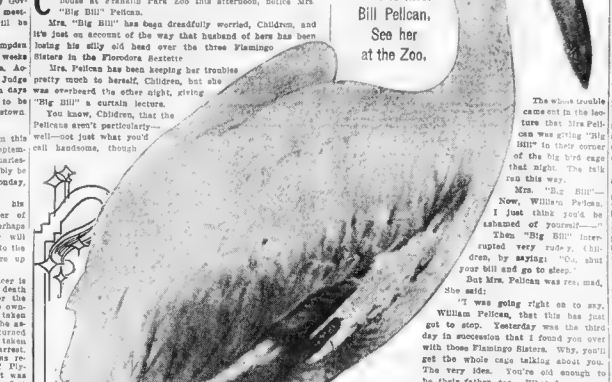
This is Mrs. Bill Pelican. See her at the Zoo.

CHILDREN, when you take your Sunday trip to the bird house at Franklin Park Zoo this afternoon, notice Mrs. "Big Bill" Pelican.

Mrs. "Big Bill" has been dreadfully worried, Children, and it's just on account of the way that husband of hers has been losing his silly old head over the three Flamingo Sisters in the Flamboro Section.

Mrs. Pelican has been keeping her troubles pretty much to herself, Children, but she was overheard the other night, giving "Big Bill" a curtain lecture.

You know, Children, that the Pelicans aren't particularly— well—not just what you'd call handsome, though—



Mrs. Pelican is one of the best-hearted old souls that ever tossed a fish up in the air and swallowed it whole.

She is that good-natured you wouldn't believe it and she has been as good a wife to "Big Bill" Pelican as a bird could.

It was all right till the pink-winged Flamingo Sisters came there, three of 'em and giddier and more dressified creatures, Children, you never saw in all your born lifts.

Of course, Children, people have their own ideas about good looks. Now Mrs. Pelican is a pronounced blonde, all white. She is a cheerful, buxom, whole-souled body and comes from a fine family, even if their beaks are rather long and heavy.

The Flamingo Sisters call themselves members of the Smart Bird Set. Their family is said to be quite prominent in Africa.

But Africa, Children, is a long, long way off. A branch of the family, too, is located in Florida.

You know the old saying: "Fine feathers don't make fine birds." Ask Mrs. "Big Bill" Pelican about it.

The whole trouble came out in the lecture that Mrs Pelican was giving "Big Bill" in their corner of the big bird cage that night. The talk ran this way.

Mrs. "Big Bill"—Now, William Pelican, I just think you'd be ashamed of yourself—

Then "Big Bill" interrupted very rudely, Children, by saying: "Oh, shut your bill and go to sleep."

But Mrs. Pelican was real mad. She said:

"I was going right on to say, William Pelican, that this has just got to stop. Yesterday was the third day in succession that I found you over with those Flamingo Sisters. Why, you'll get the whole cage talking about you. The very idea. You're old enough to be their father, too. What do you suppose those three giddy young things want to chatter with a middle-aged bird like you. And you getting bald-headed at that—"

"Big Bill"—I'm not getting bald headed a bit. And I'm not so old as you think I am.

Mrs. Pelican—Well, you are old enough to know better, anyhow. Those pink-winged Flamingoes have simply turned your head. I don't see, for the life of me, what you see in them, any how. Why, there's nothing to them, the skinny, pink-legged things. I wonder how they are able to stand up. Another thing, too, William Pelican, you may think that pink is pretty, but there is pink and pink. I don't want to say anything against another bird, but I notice that those Flamingo Sisters are pretty careful not to get their wings wet. This isn't saying, mind you, that their feathers won't wash, but that pink can an awfully fussy look to me."

"Big Bill"—Tagrilly)—That pink is not put on. It's perfectly natural. If I were you I wouldn't be jealous of——

Mrs. Pelican almost screamed: "Jealous! Jealous of you, you conceited thing. Well, when I get jealous of you, William Pelican, then fishes will swim backwards. I don't see anything so wonderful about you to be jealous about and I'm sure that I refused many flattering offers before I ever saw you. There was that handsome—I think—(squawk, squawk)—that you're horrid—(squawk, squawk)—to talk to me that way. You're no bird, that's all—(squawk squawk, squawk)."

"Now stop squawking, my dear," said "Big Bill." "And I'll get you the biggest fish I can for tomorrow's dinner. And I won't so much as flutter a feather toward those Flamingo Sisters again."

LEACH AND GOVERNOR TENER AT ELK OUTING.

Among the guests attending the third annual outing of the Massachusetts Elks, to be held on Thursday at Paragon Park, will be Edward Leach of New York, formerly of Boston.

Mr. Leach has entered the race for the exalted ruler and his friends here look for his visit here as a start for his campaign.

Governor Tener of Pennsylvania will also attend.

James H. Nicholson, grand esquire, who had charge of the Elks' parade in Portland, Ore., recently, will also be present.

It looks now as if the outing would be the largest ever held by the Massachusetts Elks.

Manager Dodge of Paragon Park has promised to give a dinner that could be excelled, and will start the clambake with special features at 5 o'clock, so that the Elks can enjoy the entire performance and still take the 10 o'clock boat home.

The price of the tickets is $2.50, which includes lunch, boat rides both ways, admission to Paragon Park, dinner and entertainment.

Tickets are limited to 500. They can be secured from Andrew J. Casey, No. 40 Court square, or any of the following brothers, who constitute the committee on tickets: Dr. John Winch, chairman, Revere; Peter C. Regan, No. 7 Colonial street, Dorchester; William H. Boorley, No. 1 Park street, Boston; Dr. A. E. Norman, No. 21 Vila avenue, Westhorpe; Albert Holmes, Hudson; Jere Healey, Newburyport; Fred S. Darling, Belmont House, Gloucester, Jacob Saartz S. [illegible] street, Boston.

38TH'S 50TH ANNIVERSARY.

Survivors to Commemorate Departure for the Front.

Observing the fiftieth anniversary of the departure of the Thirty-Eighth Massachusetts Regiment to the front in 1862, the surviving members of that command will meet at the American House, Hanover street, Monday, August 26, at 12 o'clock noon. Charles H. Taylor of Company F has arranged for the affair and will pay all the expenses incurred.

Pilgrim Shaft at Truro Real Puzzle

Visitors Marvel at Location of Monument to Famous Bag of Corn.

TRURO, Aug. 17.—Truro has a monumental puzzle on its hands, and all the Summer colonists on the sand dunes are trying to solve it. It has to do with a granite block which is said to mark the "selfsame identical honest-to-goodness spot where the Pilgrims found a bag of corn" when they landed on Cornhill nearly three hundred years ago.

The monument stands on Cornhill, from the top of which the crossest gazer can easily pick out the big Pilgrim monument at Provincetown. It is laid in sand, near the roadway, and looks for all the world like an ordinary surveyors' boundary stone. On one of its faces is the name and date:

CORNHILL
1620

Now, the thing that's puzzling the townspeople and the Summer inhabitants is, Why, for the love of Mike, Mott and others, was the location chosen for the modest little monument, and, moreover, who can prove the sworn statement of the town guides that it was on this very spot that the Pilgrims found the bag of corn that helped them to stave off the high cost of living for a few years?

DRIVER BADLY HURT.

Thrown from Watering Cart When Horses Started to Run.

While driving a watering cart on Cypress street, Brookline, yesterday, David Truss fell of No. 12 Juniper street was thrown to the ground and internally injured. He is at the Massachusetts General Hospital. The horses became frightened and started to run before Truesdell could get them under control he was thrown from the seat.

DIRT IS FLYING IN BOYLSTON TUBE

Ten Minutes to Coolidge Corner From Park Street When It's Done In 1914.

FACTS ABOUT THE NEW BOYLSTON ST. SUBWAY

Probable date of completion, July 1, 1914.

Districts served, Newton, Brookline, Brighton, Allston and all districts reached by the Commonwealth avenue and Beacon street lines.

Twelve minutes cut from present running time.

Probable cost to city, $5,000,000.

Men employed, 600.

Amount now near completion, 600 feet.

All aboard for the Boylston street subway. Ten minutes to Coolidge Corner.

That will be the call you'll hear—When?—Oh, about July 1, 1914.

But the dirt is flying right now. Six hundred laborers are at work. Half work by day; half by night. The giant tube from the Public Library west to Kenmore street is already taking shape, and about 600 feet of it is roofed over and nearing completion.

The engineers of the municipality, who graft an artery where the life blood of the city's traffic must flow, are about through with rank, and a labor at which ferrets would have throw up his bony hands in horror, is being accomplished.

When it is done residents of Brighton, Brookline, Newton, Allston and neighborhood localities will find riding to Scollay minutes cut from the running time to the Park street station.

It will cost the city close to $5,000,000. It will cost the Elevated a fortune. But the result will be swift transit, more cars, fewer strap-hangers, and better service for two hundred thousand commuters.

"They've been all thru the works of Van—if you doubt that he's monarch of the Charles—and will ride out to the Fenway and look about you.

There is the most difficult piece of construction on the whole stretch of ten thousand feet. The worst of the work is done. Only details remain.

Here is what the engineers, the surgeons of nature, have done.

They have dammed and diverted a river. They have hung a sewer, "Stony Brook," in a shaft, and bridged the earth-bridge. They have sunk forty feet deep and thrust a giant tube through its vitals.

Those are the things done and are doing this thing do not show the effects of their task. Here and there an engineer, sitting on some up-tilted box, scribbles figures on a pad. Some of these men are gray, others are young and handsome. The laborers go leisurely about their tasks.

Two pile drivers, three steam shovels, mixing machines, concrete mixers, engineers' tools, are working speedily. Cables [illegible] and [illegible] are in use. The sawing ditch. Great buckets, holding half a wagon load of earth, slide into the ditch at night as the men leave the

CAN WE DEVELOP A SIXTH SENSE?

"A girl swung high on cables receiving vibrations to her developed sixth sense by way of her hair and delicate instruments strapped to her ears—the scientific Prophetess of the future!"

THE INTERESTING PREDICTION OF SIR HIRAM MAXIM WHO THINKS THAT THE FIVE WE HAVE ARE TOO FEW FOR THE INCREASING COMPLEXITIES OF MODERN LIFE

THE ORACLE OF DELPHI. MOTTE'S PICTURE OF THE PYTHONESS ON HER TRIPOD IS SUPPOSED TO HAVE WHAT MAY BE CALLED A SIXTH SENSE.

THE HEAD OF A HORSE-SHOE BAT SHOWING THE CURIOUS EARS AND MOUTH IN WHICH SIR HIRAM MAXIM THINKS IS A SIXTH SENSE.

NO less a scientist than Sir Hiram Maxim, the greatest gun inventor in the world and a pioneer of aviation, declares that man must develop a sixth sense in order to grapple with the complexities of modern civilization.

The sixth sense is needed to enable the aviator to perceive the air currents that constantly threaten his safety and life, to enable the submarine navigator to perceive the unseen obstacles and dangers that threaten him, to enable the automobilist to perceive the presence of unseen cars that are coming round the corners, and to enable man to display new forms of sensibility in a thousand ways made necessary by modern civilization.

We can easily conceive the existence of senses different from those now possessed by man from the example of animals and existing scientific instruments. Sir Hiram Maxim, in fact, was led to speculate upon the possibility of a sixth human sense by a scientific instrument which he had just invented.

This instrument is intended to enable a ship to detect the approach of an iceberg. Vibrations quite imperceptible to human senses are sent forth by this instrument. When they strike an iceberg they are echoed back to the ship, and strike a kind of diaphragm, which repeats them in a form audible to the human ear, although otherwise they would be inaudible.

Now, if this instrument can perceive vibrations imperceptible to man, why cannot the human ear be trained to perceive them?

It can be proved that many animals are possessed of sense perceptions so far beyond those of man that they almost amount to additional senses.

Dogs can recognize a scent which is absolutely imperceptible to man. There is a kind of blind bat which is the most expert fly catcher on earth. Evidently it is able to tell the approach of flies by some sense which is not possessed by man.

The cat animals use the hairs on their noses to detect the approach of enemies or the vicinity of obstacles in the dark. It may be argued that this is a development of the sense of touch, but if so it is a development entirely unknown to man.

This fact about the cats has led Sir Hiram Maxim to the idea that the newest sense of man may be located in the hair. Apparently our hair has certain sense possibilities hitherto neglected. We have heard that the hair will stand on end from terror, and it is also said that it will droop from fatigue.

If the new sense is to be located in the hair, then it seems probable that women will possess it more generally than men. Men are too frequently bald or losing their hair. It is scarcely to be expected that a new sense will show itself in a part of the body that is falling into decay.

The development of this sense in woman would be in line with an observed tendency of modern evolution. As brute force becomes less and less a factor and delicacy of sense perception a greater factor in human affairs, then the role of woman must grow relatively more important.

We can imagine an exquisitely sensitive woman, with abundant highly vitalized hair, occupying the directing seat in one of the newest scientific devices, which requires for its guidance keener faculties than man has hitherto possessed. The services of a woman are even now essential to the operation of a telephone exchange, and they will be even more necessary with complicated machines of the future, requiring the perception of vibrations beyond present human senses.

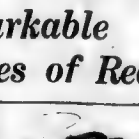
Sherlock Holmes Outdone by the New Scientific Detectives. No 14

The Mystery of the Two Dead Men of Herrlichhausen Continues This Remarkable Series of Detective Stories of Real Life

By William J. Burns
The Most Famous American Detective

IT is perhaps not surprising that very widespread interest has been aroused by the use of the interesting little scientific instrument called the dictagraph, which is employed in connection with the McNamara dynamiting case and elsewhere. The dictagraph is only one instance of the usefulness of modern science in detective work. The successful detection of crime has now largely passed out of the old system of haphazard guesswork and is shaping itself along the lines of more strictly scientific study.

The present progress of the professional criminologist of France and Germany is little understood in America, where very few detectives avail themselves of the new resources of science.



Detective Wm. J. Burns

I am making a conservative statement when I say that the actual application in real life in detective work of the methods of Professor Reiss, of the University of Lusanne; Professor Gross, of Germany, and others are often more bewildering to the uninformed than any of the imaginary detective work of Sherlock Holmes.

I am familiar work the work of foreign detectives and the records of recent modern scientific detection of crime given here on this page are very striking and instructive examples of how we avail ourselves of the tremendous resources of modern science when the peculiarities of the case require it.

W. Burns

"Lieut. Conrad got in a number of scrapes with actresses. His uncle caught him on one occasion, and this led to his practical disinheritance."

Case X-- How Dr. Gross, the Great German Criminologist, Unravelled a Double Murder by Means of Two Finger-Nail Marks, Five Hairs and a Forged Will

ONE morning last June Dr. Gross, the greatest of the German criminologists, was called to his telephone. He held a ten-minute conversation and then gave certain orders to two of his assistants and set out for the headquarters of the Berlin Chief of Police, who had phoned to him.

"Go with all speed to the house of Count Herrlichhausen on Unter den Linden," said the Chief to his chauffeur. "I have ordered nothing disturbed pending your arrival," he said to the criminologist.

"You told me over the telephone that both the old Count and his nephew were dead," said Dr. Gross, as the two sped on.

"Both," said the Chief of Police. "The old Count has been ill for a week. He expected that his illness would cause his death, and last Friday he made a will. He called in his valet, Wilhelm, and his wife to witness his signature.

"But Count Herrlichhausen did not die of his illness! He was strangled! The body of his nephew, Heinrich, who had expected to be his main heir, was found in an adjoining room. He had shot himself. The will was found in the old Count's desk. It left only five thousand marks to Heinrich; the remainder of his great estate was left to his other nephew, Conrad, the cousin of Heinrich, for whom it was believed the Count had slight affection.

"It would seem, Dr. Gross, that Heinrich discovered this last night. He and his uncle were heard talking, then there was a sudden outbreak of passion Heinrich strangled his uncle. Then overcome with remorse, he slipt himself. I have not studied with this theory, however, and am open for you."

"How did you first hear of this case?" asked Dr. Gross.

"The valet, Wilhelm, found his master's body when he went in to him this morning. He next discovered the corpse of Heinrich and notified me."

"What kind of men are his nephews?" asked Dr. Gross.

"Conrad," said the Chief of Police, "is a lieutenant in a corps stationed at Potsdam. He has had leave of absence for a month and has been in Berlin the last fortnight. He is a spendthrift, has been in several unpleasant affairs with women, and rightly earned his uncle's displeasure. Heinrich, on the other hand, was an apparently honest, straightforward young fellow, was his uncle's man of business and his favorite. He would have come into the title naturally. Really it is this astonishing will that makes me believe there is more in the affair than appears on the surface. Heinrich was extremely fond of Conrad and had often been his champion to his uncle."

"Where was Conrad last night?" asked the criminologist.

"At the theatre with friends until 11. Then the party went to a cafe. Conrad returned to his hotel at midnight. He went to his apartments. His man prepared him for the night. He was at the breakfast table this morning when the news was brought to him. He went then straight to his uncle's house. He is there now. It is impossible to suspect Conrad of having a hand in the matter, if that is what you imply by your question."

"It is well to suspect nobody until we have gone thoroughly over everything," said Dr. Gross. "Not even the dead man."

The Chief stepped out of the motor as the Herrlichhausen mansion was reached and ascended the steps. In a moment he called to the criminologist. "Lieutenant Conrad is here," he said, "but I have had him retire until sent for."

The two entered first the room where still lay the old Count. The body was on the right side of the bed, facing the windows, one leg drawn up as though in a convulsion. The bed itself stood in an alcove. Dr. Gross went to the left hand side and stretched himself across to the corpse. He examined through his glass the marks on the dead nobleman's throat. The hands were clenched and very carefully the scientific detective opened each. He gave a grunt of satisfaction as he forced apart the fingers of the left and took from between them five hairs. He placed them on a strip of adhesive paper and handed them to the Chief of Police. They were short and yellow!

"Come to this side, Chief, and see this," said Dr Gross. The Chief of Police stretched himself also across the bed. The criminologist was pointing to a small indentation on each side of the murdered man's neck. The skin was slightly broken.

"They look like the marks of teeth," said the policeman.

"Yet the Count was plainly strangled," said Dr. Gross. "Well, never mind. They are not teeth. I simply wanted you to see them."

He then went to the other side of the bed, examining the carpet step by step through his glass. Now and then he took something from it.

"Where did you say the will was found?" he asked. "In the Count's desk there," said the Chief.

Dr. Gross went to the desk and scrutinized that. It was of heavy oak. Particularly did he examine the lock. "This was open, you say?" he asked.

"Open as it is now," said the Chief. "I left the will where we found it, in the little drawer there to the left."

Dr. Gross opened the drawer, examined the document, and—put it back again.

"We will now look at the other body," he said. They went into the adjoining room. This was smaller than that of the Count, and opened out into the garden of the mansion. On the bed lay the body of a man of about thirty. It was partly dressed. A pistol was still clenched in the right hand. The bullet had gone through the right eye.

Dr Gross looked at the body for a moment and then started back with an exclamation.

"You think the hairs in the Count's hand came from that yellow beard," said the Chief of Police complacently. The face of the man on the bed had a yellow mustache and a little yellow goatee.

"It is not that at all," said Dr. Gross. "Send for my assistants. See whether they have arrived."

The assistants came. Dr. Gross whispered to one who rushed out. Then the criminologist went over the carpet of this room, inch by inch. He slowly drew to the window, opened it and went over the sash with the same minute scrutiny. Suddenly he turned to the Chief.

"Do not move until I return!" he exclaimed. He went out and soon the Chief heard some one moving under the windows. A few moments and the face of the criminologist appeared at one of them. He looked in at the Chief, waved his hand and disappeared, leaving that personage marvelling.

In another moment Dr. Gross was back in the room. He went directly to the body of Heinrich and clasped the hand that held the pistol. Very gently then he lifted finger after finger until the weapon was in his own hand. He broke it and looked at the chamber.

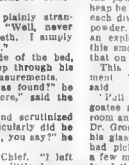
"One shot has been fired from it," he said. He took out this exploded cartridge. This he placed aside and then took out the other cartridges.

"Let us go into the other room," he said. The wondering chief obeyed. Dr. Gross took from the drawer the will. At this moment the assistant who had left a short time before returned with some leather cases.

Dr. Gross first took the exploded cartridge and made various tests of the smoke traces on it. Then he ran into the room where the body of Heinrich lay. He cut away from beneath the eye of the corpse a piece of skin, while the Chief looked on with horror. Back went the criminologist and subjected this piece of skin to other tests. Then he cut the bullets carefully from every one of the other five cartridges he had taken from Heinrich's pistol and piled the powder from each in a neat heap. Each heap he then divided and holding over one half of each division a small steel plate, set fire to the powder. When the five plates were smoked by an explosion from each half pile he subjected this smoke to the same test that he had given that on the exploded cartridge.

This done, Dr. Gross was silent for a moment. Then turning to the Chief of Police he said:

"Pull five hairs from the mustache, the goatee and the head of that body in the next room and bring them to me." The Chief obeyed. Dr. Gross took these and, one by one through his glass, compared them with the five that he had picked out of the old Count's hand. For a few moments he was silent again. At last he faced the Chief.



"There were TWO murders done in this house last night," he said. "First Heinrich was killed and then the old Count. Heinrich is not a suicide; he was slain!

"The murderer made his way into this house by the second window to the left of Heinrich's room. He entered, and in cold blood shot Herr Heinrich as he lay asleep. He did this with a revolver equipped with a Maxim silencer. Having committed this murder he went into the next room and strangled the Count. After having done this he broke open the desk wherein lay the will.

"This murderer is five feet and eleven inches tall. He is an army officer. He wears a goatee and the hair of it is yellow. The nails on his little fingers are unusually long and thick, and are kept sharpened to a point."

"Why, Lieutenant Conrad corresponds to your description," said the Chief of Police. "But it is ridiculous to accuse him."

"Summon him," said the criminologist. In a few moments the lieutenant entered the room, a couple of policemen behind him.

"Let me see your hands," said Dr. Gross. The lieutenant stretched them out. Dr. Gross silently pointed to the little fingers. On each the nail had been allowed to grow for half an inch and was sharpened at the end.

"Come over to this bed," said the detective sternly. The lieutenant, now white and shaking, obeyed. Dr. Gross seized one hand and drew it to the throat of the dead Count. He pressed the end of each of the little fingers in the indentations he had shown the Chief. They fitted perfectly!

"Arrest Lieutenant von Herrlichhausen as the murderer of his uncle and his cousin!" ordered Dr. Gross. The policemen closed in on the young officer.

"You go too fast, Dr. Gross," said the Chief. "This man's alibi is perfect. Besides, what motive could he have? The will leaves everything to him."

Dr. Gross smiled faintly. "That," he said, "is what we are going to find out. Call my assistants."

As his assistants entered Dr. Gross took from the drawer the will of Count Herrlichhausen.

"This will," he said, "is in the handwriting of the Count and is duly signed and witnessed. It is extremely brief. It reads:

"It is my wish that my nephew, Heinrich, shall receive from my estate the sum of ten thousand marks, and that my beloved nephew Conrad, shall receive all the balance of the real and personal property which I possess after this sum of ten thousand marks is paid. It is my wish that he retain in his service all my old servants and give to them the sums which we have decided upon. This is my last will and testament and revokes and takes the place of anything heretofore written purporting to be my will."

Dr. Gross lighted a small alcohol lamp, into a shallow vessel which he placed over the flame he poured a brownish liquid.

"Iodine," he said in answer to a look from the Chief. "The fumes of iodine will tell us whether any part of this paper has been moistened."

He held the reverse side of the will against the fumes arising from the steaming iodine. As they reached the spots on the paper where the words "Heinrich" and "Conrad" were written, the paper turned violet blue, while the immediate surrounding portions turned a yellowish brown.

"The criminologist opened the dead fingers, He took out five yellow hairs."

"Proof positive," said Dr. Gross. "The names have first been erased either with a rubber or a sharp knife and then transposed. To restore the smooth surface of the paper the forger used a mixture of flour and water. This accounts for the violet blue color.

"The next step is to find out what sort of ink was used in writing the body of the will and whether the same ink was used on these two names of the nephews."

Dr. Gross took from a small case a dozen vials which he placed on the table before him.

"These vials," he explained, "contain the various reagents for different inks. Here is oxalic acid, muriatic acid, sulphuric acid, common lemon juice, nitric acid, chloride of gold, etc. Properly diluted with water these reagents, when they come in contact with the ink, enable me to tell which kind has been used. We criminologists are as familiar with the formula of every kind of ink in existence as a baker is with the flour he uses. For instance, oxalic acid wipes away any ink whose base is iron, does not change Nigrosin ink, changes Vanadin ink and makes it spread a little, and turns Geoffin ink pink; but I'm not going to use oxalic acid. I'm going to use a four per cent solution of hydrosilfic acids instead in water."

He prepared the solution and then moistened one of the words under suspicion. Immediately the ink turned a deep red.

"Iron gallic ink," said Dr. Gross. "If it had spread, turning the same color, I would have known that the ink used had a sulphate of copper base. Now we must find out whether the names of the nephews were written in that same ink."

He moistened one stroke of the letter "H" in "Heinrich" with the solution. It remained unchanged!

The criminologist took another vial. "I am going to moisten the lower part of the word 'h' with a 10 per cent solution of muriatic acid in water," he said. "Of all the reagents, muriatic acid is almost the only one which changes every kind of ink somewhat, except one. Look, if you please," he said, having made his test; "no change has occurred!"

"What do you infer from that?" then asked the Chief.

"The ink used in the names of 'Heinrich' and 'Conrad' was India ink, the base of which is carbon. That is practically the only ink which will not react to any chemical agent."

"But what have you gained by this knowledge?" asked the Chief a little impatiently. "I do not quite follow you. Why do you make all these tests?"

"Because," said the criminologist, "I wish to get at the motive of this crime. If the Count had made a will leaving everything to Heinrich except 10,000 marks to Conrad, and then the names had been changed by Conrad there would be a motive for this crime, would there not?"

Conrad rose to his feet with a cry.

Dr. Gross waved him back. He produced a steel plate about the size of a cooking pot. From another box he drew some rubber rings about half an inch in thickness and half an inch to two inches in diameter. He then placed the will face downward on the steel plate and over the exact spots where appeared the names of the two nephews and which the fumes of the iodine had left violet blue he pressed down the rings. Securing them tightly, he boiled some water and poured it into a very narrow rubber tubing at the end of which was a very fine spray. This spray he allowed to play upon the paper within the rings. After five minutes he lifted the paper, removed the rings and reversed the will. The words "Heinrich" and "Conrad" had completely disappeared!

"It is as I thought," he said. "The Count, when he wrote this will, used India gallic ink—and that is a very lucky circumstance to us. All inks having iron as their base penetrate through the upper skin of the paper right into the very fibre, and some trace of a word written in this ink must remain. I have now removed the carbon ink."

Opening another vial, he dipped a toothpick into the liquid.

"This," he said, touching it to the paper "is sulphide of ammonia. It will bring to the surface any latent trace of the word written there."

Even as he spoke, faint lines began to appear to form and coalesce. Where the word "Conrad" had been, appeared the word "Heinrich," and where "Heinrich" had been the word "Conrad" sprang out!

"There is your motive," said the criminologist. "You," he said, turning to the Lieutenant, "you were told by Heinrich of your disinheritment. He tried to change your uncle's mind and that was what they quarreled over. You slipped from your hotel this morning, climbed in through your cousin's room and murdered him. Your pistol was equipped with a Maxim silencer. You took the exploded cartridge out of your pistol, fitted it into his and thrust the weapon into his stiffening hand. You then went to the next room and strangled your uncle. After that you opened his desk, removed the will, and you used the ink you found on his desk, not knowing that he had written the will with a different kind of ink. Here is the pen, Chief, by the way.

"You then slipped back to your hotel unnoticed and thought your alibi was complete.

"Yes, yes," cried the lieutenant. "I did it all! I did it. I was crazed by the injustice!" The police led him away.

"I do not see how you arrived so swiftly to the conclusion that Heinrich had been murdered," said the Chief, afterward.

"Did you notice that Heinrich was shot through the eye?" said the criminologist. "In all the records of suicide over the world there is not a single instance where a man has shot himself through the eye. There is a feeling of horror that prevents suicides from doing so, even when insane. That circumstance at once roused my suspicions.

"Then there was the revolver in Heinrich's hand. It has been demonstrated by repeated experiments that the victim's grip of a dying man cannot be simulated. A pistol placed in the hand of a man killed only a second before will be weak and ineffective compared to the agonized clutch of the dying. This would seem to be a psychological rather than a physical fact. The nerve shock experienced by a man's dying agony is responsible for the intensity of the grip. I suspected at once when I took the pistol from Heinrich's hand that the resistance was not up to the suicidal standard. A comparison of the hairs in the dead Count's hand proved that they were not Heinrich's. Whose were they, then? You have seen."

"But how did you know that the murderer used a silencer?" asked the chief.

"By the powder marks," said the criminologist. "A pistol held at a certain distance and loaded with certain bullets will produce a certain powder mark effect.

"Beside that, I examined the powder marks themselves. The smoke of every powder is different. My tests showed me that the exploded cartridge in Heinrich's revolver was loaded with different powder than the other bullets."

"But his long finger nails!" said the Chief.

"The easiest of all," said Dr. Gross. "Nothing else would have made those marks on the old Count's throat! A mere matter of observation!"

How a Daring Band of Motor Boat Pirates Recruited from Fashionable Society's Own Ranks Are Looting the Unprotected Shores of the Summer Colony

SOCIETY motor boat pirates, captained by a woman, are the latest enemies of the rich Newport, supposedly impregnable, is suffering from a series of very peculiar robberies. Women whose jewels are guarded as zealously as those of a queen are the unhappy victims. They do not lose their jewels in the old way; fashion changes even in burglary.

Formerly a woman lost her diamonds or pearls while dancing or flirting with some fascinating stranger. This man, in reality an enterprising thief, would attend a dance or a reception, become acquainted with a bejeweled woman, dance or flirt with her and incidentally relieve her of as many gems as he dared. But this is out of date. Raffleses were becoming too common, the method was growing dangerous. Something new was needed, some daring departure had to be made.

Newport is therefore the practice ground of the most modern thieves, thieves whose cunning is more dangerous than that of their predecessors, for they do not scruple to use the latest modern inventions. And at the head of all the trouble is a woman. Newporters will have to "find the woman" before they can stamp out the burglaries!

Newport has always guarded its houses and gardens very carefully, unless a person entering the grounds is known he is made to get out at once. Therefore the present situation is all the more staggering to the police.

Houses whose grounds are patrolled by watchmen from sunset to sunrise, whose entrance gates are security barred have been entered, priceless jewels and plate have been taken and not the slightest clue left. Not a foot print, not a finger mark points to the bold pirates. Not a fold of a curtain is changed, and certainly no one has passed the watchman at the gates. These men say they hear nothing, see nothing. But the jewels are gone. Some one has taken them.

Ostensibly the work of ghosts, but in reality the work of the cleverest gang of clever thieves; the work of a woman!

When these robberies were first reported to the police it was decided that the thieves got away in a motor car. They made such quick getaways. Extra watchmen were stationed on Bellevue avenue and streets touching that shaded high road.

One night eight rubber-heeled imported sleuths guarded a certain handsome mansion on the cliffs near Narragansett avenue. That night the house was entered and jewels valued at half a million dollars, it was whispered, were taken. The sleuths and the men servants swore that no one entered the grounds. How could they? The grounds are surrounded by an iron fence twelve feet high. The gates were locked. The only unguarded side was the ocean side, and the cliffs here are nearly two hundred feet high.

How did the pirate get away? A maid servant peeking from her window just before dawn saw a shadow slink behind some shrubs. She thought it was one of the sleuths. A few minutes later she heard the muffled chug-chug of a motor boat, and almost instantly a long shadow cut through the water just off shore. The sleuths also saw and heard. Said one to another. "There goes an early lobster man. That's a good boat he has."

The next morning the detectives saw a great light. "The robbers are pirates," they cried, "they use a motor boat."

They surely do use a motor boat. No old fogey automobile for this modern Miss Captain Kidd, the First Lady of the Gang. They must have a boat, they cover so much ground, or, at least, so much water, in one night. They have appeared in Jamestown, across the bay from Newport, where many very wealthy Philadelphians have Summer homes. They have looted places at Narragansett Pier, which is less than an hour's sail down the bay.

It is a physical impossibility to go from one of these places to another at night in anything but a boat, and the boat must be of the swiftest kind. So the private detectives engaged by the wealthy cottagers are looking for a large and handsome hydroplane.

Great secrecy is being preserved, many of the cottagers who have lost their most valuable jewels will not admit the theft—they do no like notoriety. The detectives believe they are on the right track and are keeping very still until they have their victim under arrest.

But Newport knows more than the detectives realize! Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish arrived in Newport the first of July. Cross ways had been closed for three years. It is one of the show places on the Ocean Drive. The day Mrs. Fish arrived she sent out cards for a large dinner. It was to be a very elaborate affair. Suddenly Mrs. Fish postponed the dinner, giving a curious excuse.

"The key of the silver vault has been lost and we cannot open it, Mrs. Fish said over the telephone to some friends.

This naturally caused a good deal of gossip, it was so odd. Then a strange tale was whispered in the colony. The plate had been stolen.

Mrs. Lewis Iselin, another Newport victim of "Miss Captain Kidd."

Mrs. Oliver Harriman, who mourns a $20,000 vanity and cigarette case.

Mrs. Adrian Iselin, upon whom "Miss Captain Kidd" levied a pearl necklace valued at $50,000.

Crossways had been entered the night after the family's arrival and the silver and much jewelry taken. This astonishing story flew about Newport in quick order. The pirates had run their speedy noiseless boat in under the rocks at Bailey's Beach and attacked Crossways from the watershed. Their boat had been seen but mistaken for a fishing craft.

Some one has commented on the few jewels that are being worn this Summer by the matrons whose jewel collections are famous. Those whose jewels have not been stolen by the pirates have sent their precious stones to safety vaults in New York and Philadelphia. But no one will admit that anything has been stolen.

Miss Captain Kidd could deck herself from head to foot with her stolen plunder if she dared to. Odd tales are whispered along the water front. One old salt who sits by the hour in an old boathouse on Long Wharf tells of a long, gray boat that frequently slinks in and out among the handsome yachts off the New York Yacht Club. One night he swears that she was nosing along shore between Ida Lewis's lighthouse and Mrs. John Nicholas Brown's estate. At the wheel was a beautiful girl, wearing a pale gray evening gown and a "funny kind of a coat." Whether the old man was drawing on his imagination or not it remains that the next day Newport was staggered to hear that Mrs. Brown had "lost" a pearl dog collar, valued at three hundred thousand dollars.

The pirate boat is handsome, it is swifter than anything in the bay. It must have cost thirty thousand dollars. The puzzle the detectives have to solve is by no means an easy one. There are at least three men and one girl in it. It has been practically proven that these pirates mingle freely with the cottagers at the Casino, at Bailey's Beach and at many of the large private entertainments. They know the lay of the land. They know every twist and turn of the gardens, they know each room in the houses they enter. It is therefore obvious that they have been received as guests in them.

Mrs. Harry Barton Jacobs has "lost" a diamond and ruby pendant valued at $200,000. The rubies, it is said, are the very rare Oriental stones once mined in Badakhshan and are practically priceless. Mrs. Henry Redmond one of the wealthiest widows of the Newport set, whispers that she has "lost" a bracelet valued at fifty thousand dollars.

Of course the Casino gossips say that when a woman acknowledges to having lost one jewel, the real truth is that she has lost several, perhaps the bulk of her collection.

Mrs. Oliver Harriman, Mrs. Lewis Iselin, Mrs. Adrian Iselin and Mrs. Norman Whitehouse acknowledge individual losses, but deny anything further. But these charming matrons, formerly known as "jewel queens," are wearing no jewels this Summer. The gossips say, "You remember that when Mrs. Charlie Oelrichs and Mrs. Ogden Goelet were robbed they wore no jewelry for several months."

This proves to Newport's satisfaction that all women who do not carry their gems on their backs have been robbed.

These pirates are quick to seize the least advantage. A fortnight ago several handsome cottages were burned at Narragansett. Naturally all the cottagers turned out to fight the fires. After the excitement was over Mr. Kenneth Murchison, Mr. Phil Randolph and several other men discovered that their homes had been looted. This was in broad daylight. Later it was proved that a strange motor boat had been standing off shore for two hours during the excitement.

"From him that hath, shall be taken," is the motto of the pirates. They do not, as a rule, take much at a time. They evidently understand to a dollar the value of the jewels owned by the people they rob. They pick and choose. They do not gather in all they might. Only the most valuable are taken. A dog collar here, a tiara there. They take only what can be slipped into a pocket, perhaps the girl wears the jewels out of the house. She helps to rob! One tale has it that at a ball given at a mansion on the cliffs the girl walked out of the house with the hostess's tiara on her head!

Many theories are being presented as to the manner in which the pirates work. The most plausible is that the girl, dressed in the most perfect taste and carrying herself with self-possession, enters a house while a dinner, a dance, or a reception is being given. Even in the largest houses there is a certain excitement and laxity when entertainments are in progress.

The Casino theory is that Miss Captain Kidd, looking like any other guest, enters the house at the moment several others are entering. There are always, even at dinners, guests who are unknown to others and to the servants. The girl finds her way upstairs and, of course, any one seeing her supposes her to be a guest. The hostess is always downstairs receiving her guests. It seems very easy.

Only those houses are entered that have a water approach. If the detectives had reasoned this out earlier they might have captured the pirates before this.

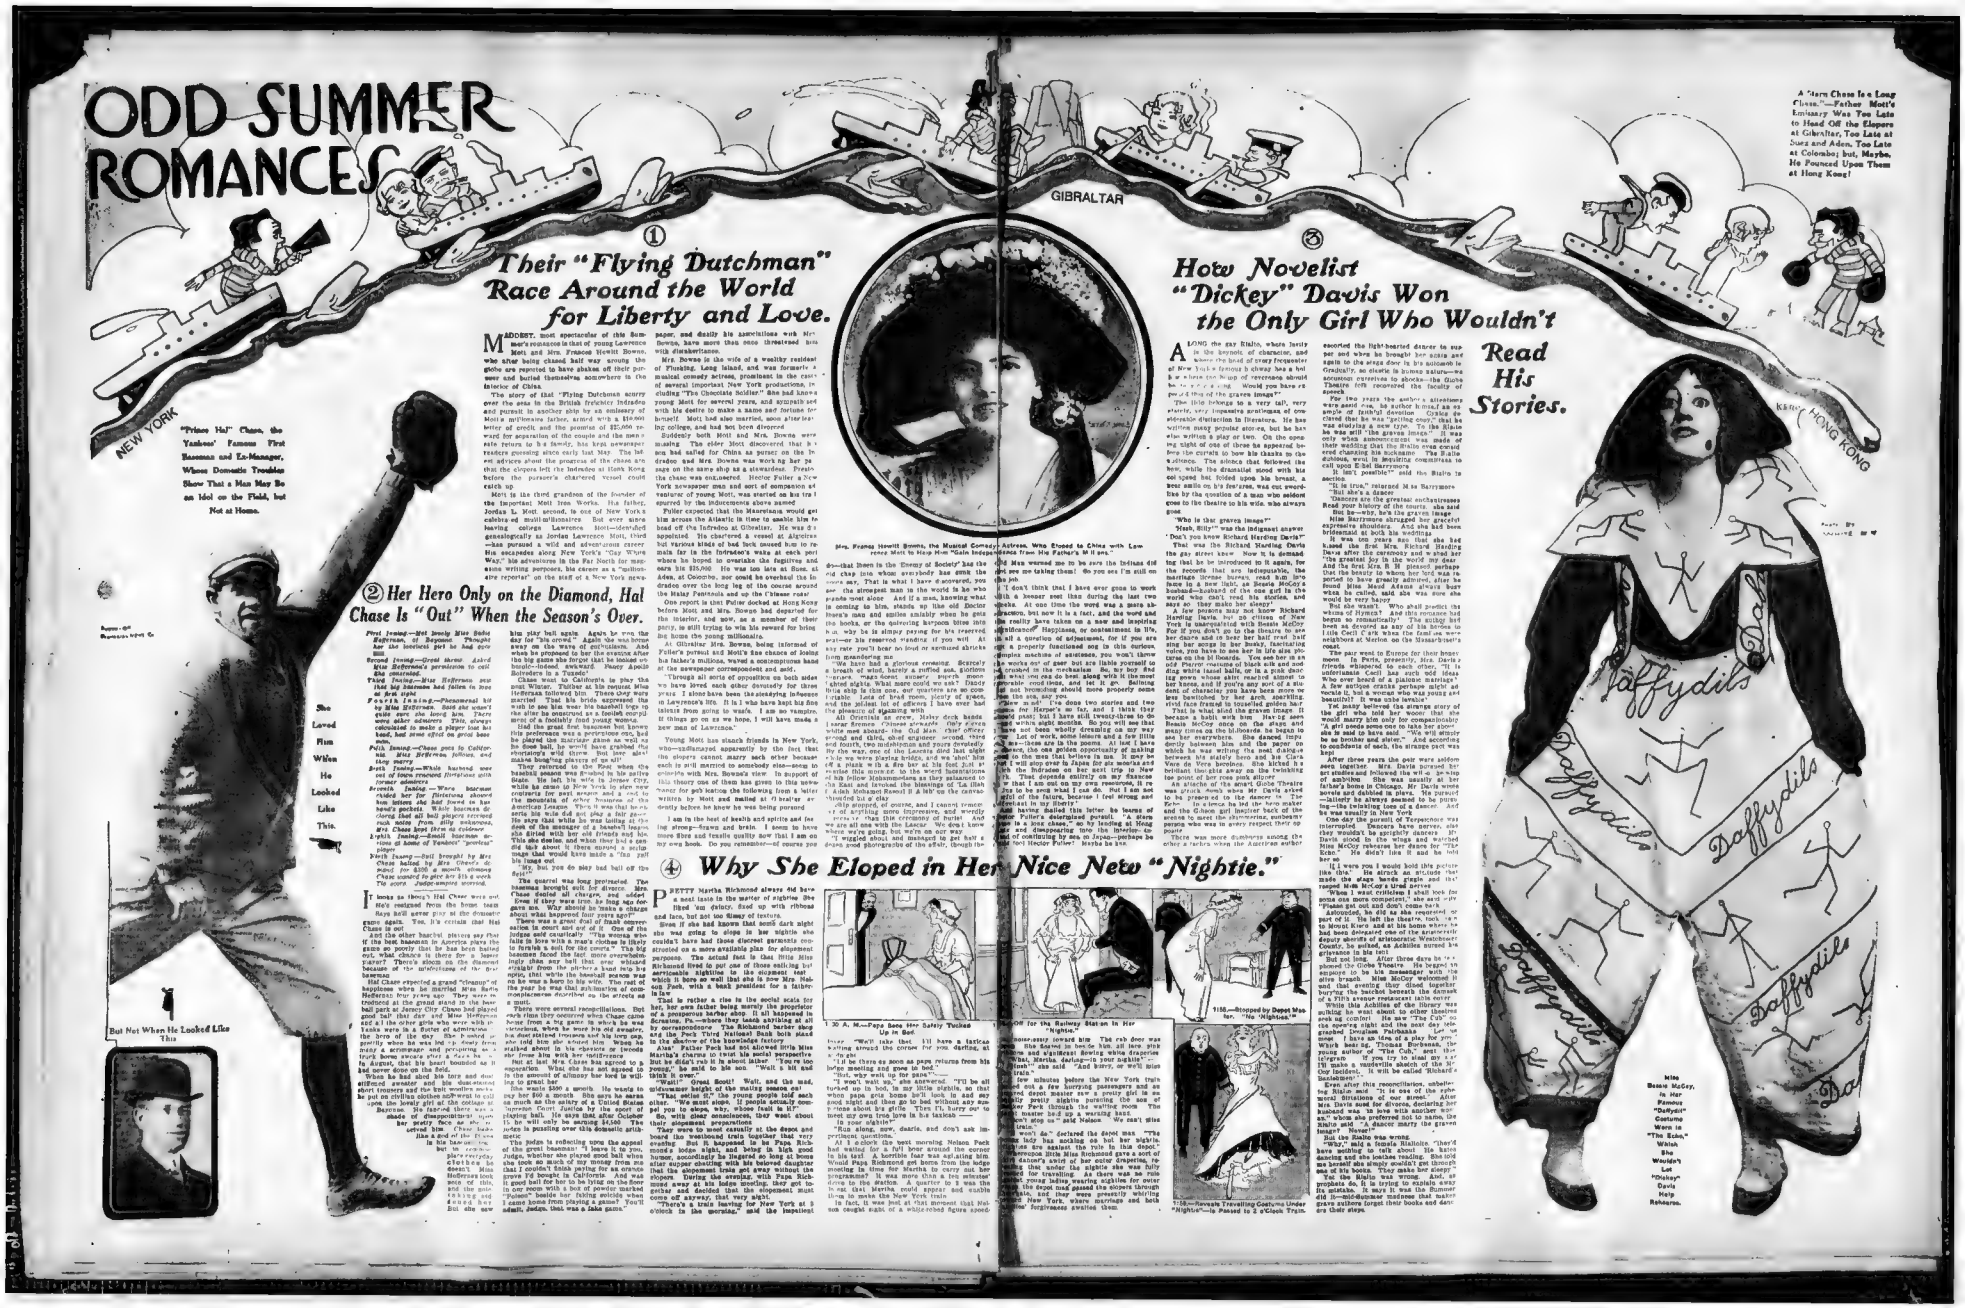
The houses on the cliffs, the Breakers, owned by Mrs. Vanderbilt; Marble House, owned by Mrs. Oliver Belmont; Ochre Court, owned by Mrs. Ogden Goelet, have been in reality at the mercy of the pirates, for the estates can easily be approached from the ocean. The forty steps at the foot of Narragansett avenue give clear access from the beach to these houses, to the John Drexel house and the Twombly mansion. This approach is now carefully guarded night and day.

Is it any wonder that Newport is hunting pirates? Is it any wonder that every strange craft entering the harbor is viewed with suspicion?

Even the yachts in the harbor are not safe. Robberies have occurred on board several of them. But "mum" is the word and it is practically impossible to make the losers tell of their "losses." Mrs. Stewart Barney, wife of the well known architect, and a niece of Mrs. Richard Gambrill, "lost" a valuable brooch while a guest on the North Star, Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt's yacht. This "loss" was made public, but a greater "loss" was kept secret; it is noticeable, however, that Mrs. Vanderbilt has not worn a certain dog collar for several weeks. She says that it is being repaired.

Mrs. Redmond's "loss" also occurred on a yacht at anchor near the yacht club.

ODD SUMMER ROMANCES



① Their "Flying Dutchman" Race Around the World for Liberty and Love.

MADDEST, most spectacular of this Summer's romances is that of young Lawrence Mott and Mrs. Frances Hewitt Bowne, who since being chased half way around the globe are reported to have shaken off their pursuer and buried themselves somewhere in the interior of China.

The story of that "Flying Dutchman scurry over the seas to the British Protectorate Islands and pursuit in another ship by an emissary of Mott's millionaire father, armed with a $10,000 letter of credit and the promise of $25,000 reward for separation of the couple and the man's having a wife and family, has kept newspaper readers guessing since early last May. The latest advices about the progress of the chase are that the cirpors left the Barbados at Hong Kong before the pursuer's chartered vessel could catch up.

Mott is the third grandson of the founder of the important Mott Iron Works. His father, Jordan L. Mott second, is one of New York's celebrated multi-millionaires. But ever since having christened Lawrence Mott—declared genealogically as Jordan Lawrence Mott, third—when barely a wild and adventurous youth of big possessions along New York's "Gay White Way," his adventures in the Far North for manufacturing purposes and since as a "gentleman-adventure reporter" on the staff of a New York newspaper, and deadly his associations with Mrs. Bowne, have more than once threatened him with disinheritance.

Mrs. Bowne is the wife of a wealthy resident of Flushing, Long Island, and was formerly a musical comedy actress, prominent in the cast of several important New York productions, including "The Chocolate Soldier." She had known young Mott for several years, and acquainted and with his desire to make a name and fortune for himself. Mott had also married, soon after leaving college, and had two divorced.

Suddenly both Mott and Mrs. Bowne were missing. The elder Mott discovered that his son had sailed for China as purser on the Schooner and Mrs. Bowne was work by her passages on the same ship as a stewardess. Presto the chase was on-lowered. Hector Fuller a New York newspaper man and sort of companion of the venture of young Mott, was started on his trail covered by the indiscreets above named Fuller expected that the Mauretania would get him across the Atlantic in time to smoke him to head off the fugitives at Gibraltar. He was disappointed. He chartered a vessel at Algeciras but various kinds of bad luck caused him to remain far in the fairdance's wake at each port where he hoped to overtake the fugitives and when his $10,000 letter of credit was cashed at Aden, at Colombo, nor could he overhaul the in dorsee over the long leg of its course around the Malay Peninsula and up the Chinese coast.

One report is that Fuller docked at Hong Kong before Mott and Mrs. Bowne had departed for the interior, and now, as a member of their party, is still trying to win his reward for bring his home the young millionaire.

At Gibraltar Mrs. Bowne, being informed of the chase, had the chance of losing the chance of losing her children's custody if she failed to return to Rotterdam in a Tuxedo.

Chase was also indicated to play the part Winston. Further at his request Miss Bowne followed him. Then they were secretly married. That his bride approved the step is indicated by the fact that she left her son after his assurance of a decided enjoyment of a decidedly fond young woman.

Had the grand fun business but known this performance was a perspicuous one, but regard the marriage ceremony as well as the dose ball, he would have grabbed the advertising wild theme. But love and romance boo-hooing glasses of an all!

They returned to the West when the baseball season was finished in his native Boston. He left his wife in former city, while he came to New York to sign new contracts for next season. Then he left for the mountain of other business of the American League. They it was that he asserts his wife did not play a fair game. He says that while he was taking off at the front of the manager of a baseball league, she divied with her own friends and that this she denies, and when they had a pen dig talk about it there ensued a scene image that would have made a "fan pat things out.

Wife had no sleep but had oil the night.

The quarrel was long protracted. Finally baseman brought suit for divorce. Mrs. Chase denied all charges, and added: Even if they were true he long ago forgave him. Why should he make a public row about what happened four years ago?"

There was a great deal of flash conversation in court and out of it. One of the judges said caustically: "The wrong wife fails in love with a man's clothes is likely to furnish a bail for the courts." The big baseman faced the last more overwhelmingly than ever ball that year when he was straight from the pitcher's hand into his glove, that while the baseball season was on he was a hero to his wife. The rest of the year he was that unfortunate of all unfortunates described on the streets as a goat.

There were several recapitulations. But the one when they ordered Mrs. Chase out of house from A ring game in which he was the principal player. Then she did everything she could think of to annoy him and when she told him she missed him he knocked down his head advised to his face and struck her from him with her tenderness

But at last Mrs. Chase has agreed to separation. What else has not agreed to is the amount of alimony he has been asking to grant her.

She wants $500 a month. He wants to pay her $60 a month. She says he earns as much as the salary of a United States Supreme Court Justice by the sport of slinging ball. He says that after October he will only be earning $4,500. The judge is pondering over this financial difficulty.

The judge is reflecting upon the appeal of the great baseman: "I leave it to you, judge, whether she played good ball when she took so much of my money from me that I could not play good ball. She wanted to go to California. I bought a ticket for her to be lying on the train in our room with a box of candy marked "Poison" beside her talking suicide when I came home from playing a game." You'll admit, judge, that was a fake game."

② Her Hero Only on the Diamond, Hal Chase Is "Out" When the Season's Over.

First Inning—Hal Inocky Miss Dolly Hafferman, of Bayonne, N. J., becomes her the loveliest girl he had ever seen.

Second Inning—Great Harm! Asked Miss Hafferman's permission to call and she consented.

Third Inning—Miss Hafferman soon that big baseman had fallen in love at first sight.

Fourth Inning—Phenomenal hit by Miss Hafferman. Said she wasn't quite sure she loved him. There were other admirers. That, no doubt, calculated to make a player lose his head and put his effort up against it.

Fifth Inning—Chase goes to California, wins Miss Hafferman, follows and they marry.

Sixth Inning—While honeymooning out of town rumored Hartford girl's former admirers.

Seventh Inning—Worst baseman visited her Bayonne home and showed him letters she had found in her hubby's pockets. Wild scenes followed during that all ball players received such mail from their admirers.

Mrs. Chase kept them as evidence

Eighth Inning—Baseball fans and fans of baseball players received such mail from their admirers.

Ninth Inning—Chase goes to California, but Mrs. Chase refuses to follow and they marry.

Tenth Inning—Ball brought by Mrs. Chase hailed by Mrs. Chase's divorce suit for $500 a month alimony. Chase wanted to pay her $75 a week. The score. Judge umpires wrong.

It looks as though Hal Chase were out. He's retained from the home team.

Says he'd never play at the domestic game again. Too, it's certain that Hal Chase is out

And the other baseball players say that if the best baseman in America plays the game so poorly that he has been hailed out, what chance is there for a lesser player? There's a chance on the diamond because of the unlikeliness of the fair batsman.

Hal Chase expected a grand "clean-up" of happiness when he married Miss Dolly Hafferman four years ago. They were introduced at the grand stand in the baseball park at Jersey City Chase had played about half the day and was in his baseball togs and all the other girls who were with us Tanks were in a flutter of admiration for the hero of the day

The New Drapery Gowns

A Charming New Evening Gown of Green Chiffon Carried Out with the Double Draping. "Lucile" Model.

A Most Graceful Creation of Evening Gown with Scarf, Both of Magenta Chiffon Combined with Marabout.

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women.

Lady Duff-Gordon's new Paris establishment brings her into close touch with that centre of fashion.

Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishment is at Nos. 37 and 39 West Fifty-seventh street, New York City.

By Lady Duff-Gordon ("Lucile")

THIS week I am showing you three very charming and unusual costumes. They are chic in color and design. They are truly Parisian, and so just the least bit daring. In the bottom picture I am giving you an original fancy dress costume. It is an Oriental design. The wearer should be tall and a graceful dancer to display this costume to perfection.

In fact, I call this my ideal dress for a danseuse. The under robe is a rare combination of dull blue and purple chiffon. It is draped in the true Turkish fashion, with long pointed ends. The elaborate overdress is a striking affair of bright green and gold. The heavy ornaments around the waist are of gold embroidery, the tiny bolero is also of the gold. The curious headdress is a green and gold gypsy scarf, and all the beads and spangles are gold. Slippers and stockings of gold complete the costume.

The second picture shows a very beautiful gown of draped chiffon; it is one of my most perfect evening gowns. The bodice is a charming emerald bolero trimmed with green rhinestones. The chief feature is the long, plain chiffon sleeves which hang rather loosely in graceful folds. The double draped skirt is of emerald chiffons, the edge finished by a band of emerald satin. The purple scarf is edged with marabout and green rhinestones. The headdress is quaint and very becoming; it is just a circlet of emerald velvet heavily studded with the green rhinestones. It fastens in the front under a gold buckle.

I am using with good effect certain shades of magenta in evening gowns. Few people realize that magenta is essentially an evening color; it is a terrible mistake to use any of its various tones in the daytime.

In the costume here shown the lower part winds in loose folds that form a train in the back. It is a voluminous affair, but as is shown, tends to preserve the slender outline. The scarf is of magenta chiffon edged with a deeper shade of satin, and outlined with marabout. The headdress worn with this rare and beautiful costume shows the Turkish influence very strongly. It is nothing more or less than a Turkish turban of plum colored satin. The aigrette is of black and white and gives the necessary height.

As these pictures plainly show we are going in madly this season for scarves of all kinds. Never have I seen more beautiful ones than the smart Parisians are wearing just at present. Usually they are of chiffons, but all the soft and supple satins and crepes are also used. It is a charming and graceful fashion and I am glad that the smartest women are taking it up. The very low-necked frocks are, I suppose, responsible for the fad. A scarf of some description is often the saving grace of the modern costume.

The scarf shown is one of the handsomest; it is developed in the chiffons and the satin, but could be made of crepe meteor or plain charmeuse with as good effect. The fashion of combining mirabeau and semi-precious stones is one that I like exceedingly, and I am sure that it will obtain greatly during the coming Winter. A soft black fur, a sort of fox, is also being used on some of the newest scarves. But always the jewelled bands are used in some way.

As regards the completion of the coiffure in the evening, you may possibly want something less sensational than the first mentioned lace cap, or less expensive to yourself and obstructive to others than the "unburned" and fans and ferweyns and so forth, of closely clustered ospreys which are being used this season in hitherto undreamed of profusion.

So let me introduce and recommend to you a narrow and quite light bandeau studded closely with paste, which shades from shading black to a white brilliance and which is worn right across and low down on the forehead, the little wire loops at either end permitting of its easy and firm fastening under the hair at the sides. And then directly in the centre there uprises to the extent of some fourteen inches, a light osprey mount whose shading from black to white is followed and accentuated by the used of a central line of first black and then white stones. The whole thing is extraordinarily becoming and effective, and it could, of course, be carried out in shades of emerald green or sapphire blue,while though it is so tall, it is so fine and filmy that it can never be a nuisance to those who sit behind it at the theatre or opera.

My Secrets of Beauty

Mme. Lina Cavalieri.

"Give the neck and chin their daily stretching exercise."

By Mme. Lina Cavalieri, the Greatest Living Beauty

No. 188- THE SPIRIT THAT KEEPS YOU YOUNG

"BELIEVE me, if the spirit remains young, the flesh will age but slowly." That is the comforting assurance given by Mme. Cavalieri in to-day's beauty lecture. You must banish all fear of old age—don't be alarmed at the sight of the first wrinkle or gray hair. Keep cheerful, be interested in things, persons and conditions, and flee from the presence of bores.

Having thus struck the keynote of retarding the approach of age, Mme. Cavalieri gives practical rules for avoiding the outward marks of advancing years

By Mme. Lina Cavalieri

OLD age is the bogie that stalks every woman in every country. Or, it were more correct to say, the fear of old age is that bogie. Despite the example of women who have remained enchantresses until nicety, women regard the early wrinkles and the first gray hair as a tragedy.

Let me advise you to banish that fear. The forty-year-old enchantress, Otero has told you, is the invincible one. In your country a beauty recently contracted her last and best marriage at fifty. Believe me, if the spirit remains young, the flesh will age but slowly.

Contrive to keep interested in persons and conditions and circumstances. Don't let yourself be bored. Flee from bores or drive them from you.

When you are uninterested, your face grows heavy and opaque. It loses its reflective power, that mirror-like quality which is its chief charm. One of the wisest and most enchanting women I ever knew—truly a woman irresistible—told me she would never allow any one to see her in any but her sunniest mood.

"Meeting people is making pictures of one's self," she said. "Memory pictures that remain long, perhaps forever, in their minds. It is difficult, sometimes impossible, to remove that memory picture. They may see us in other moods and phases, but the ugly picture persists. If I am in an unbecoming mood, I hide until it is past, as I would hide did I suffer from an infectious disease."

That is true philosophy of charm. Be interested, be cheerful, be at your best when you are in public. If you cannot be these hide from the sight of men and women until the eclipse of your charming self has passed. If you are a business and professional woman and can not do so, at least hide the mood beneath an impassive face and behind the screen of a silent tongue.

Two extreme evidences of the approach of age are certain conditions of the head and feet. Don't let the lower part of your face grow heavy. That adds to the appearance of age. "Jowl-like" cheeks and a loose-hanging chin add years to apparent age. Prevent that defect, or, if it has appeared, correct it by great care.

Be vigilant as a worthy policeman. Be on the alert. Say to yourself, "Am I holding my head high? Am I giving the muscles of my chin exercise to keep them firm, or am I allowing the flesh to accumulate and form a bag about it?"

As many times a day as you can, and at least every morning and evening, give the neck and chin their stretching exercises. Raise the chin and let the head fall back upon the shoulders. Let it rest as far back as possible, and with the tips of the fingers press gently upward the muscles at the sides of the neck. Persuade those muscles. Train them. In time they will respond to the education you are giving them and grow firmer.

If, at the same time, you iron the failing muscles of the chin and neck with a piece of ice the process of rebuilding the lower part of the face will be quicker. But I have found very effective retiring with a piece of soft cloth, saturated in witch hazel, pressed about my neck. Witch hazel is an astringent and will draw the flaccid skin tighter.

No matter how tired you are, don't allow yourself to look tired. The tired lines and slipping downward muscles add greatly to your appearance of age. Control them. It can be done by an exercise of the will. Smile. Most women look better when smiling, and all, who have well kept teeth, look younger.

I said you must look to your feet. That is true. If you have worn shoes that give you a silly, mincing gait, buy larger ones and acquire a free, natural, springing walk. Don't drag your feet about as though they and your body had a weight you could not scarcely bear. Lift your feet and walk with the fine spring and swing of youth. This, too, is a habit that can be formed even at an advanced age. Perhaps you have had the slow, heavy step of age from your childhood. Then it is high time to change it.

"Persuade those muscles. Train them. In time they will respond and grow firmer."

Beauty Questions Answered

A. S. writes: "Will you please tell me if there is a permanent cure for superfluous hair on a girl's upper lip as so many have?"

There is no unfailing remedy for superfluous hair, for even electrolysis sometimes fails. Try various remedies until the hair is killed. Tweezers often remove the hair permanently. Try them first, pulling each hair out gently, being sure first to sterilize the tweezers by passing them through a flame or dipping them into boiling water. After removing the hairs bathe the lip with witchhazel or pat into it a soothing cold cream.

Washing the lip repeatedly with equal parts of peroxide of hydrogen and water weakens the hairs, as well as bleaches them, so that they will be far less conspicuous than if dark.

E. K. complains of a wrinkle running from the nostril to the corner of the mouth.

Gentle massage upward, pressing and lifting the muscles with the first three fingers of each hand plentifully anointed with cold cream should gradually remove these lines.

P. M. wishes to know one of your excellent and harmless recipes for reducing flesh on the face.

Eat less and exercise more. As the flesh on your body diminishes the flesh on the face will also.

H. H. asks my advice about the treatment of "tiny, hairlike red veins in the nose that are anything but becoming." She adds: "My face muscles are sagging a little and I'm only twenty-nine years old."

As to those red lines in the nose I should certainly go to a physician for advice about my circulation, which is evidently defective. Or if that appearance is a birthmark I fear you must rely upon cosmetics to cover it.

The sagging muscles are, perhaps, a sign of fatigue. Perhaps you are working beyond the bounds of your vitality. Rest more. Bind up those muscles with a chin band of rubber or muslin, worn at night. And train yourself to hold your head high. Learn the lesson of head-holding from some mettlesome horse.

BEAUTY HINTS
Superfluous Hair

Will you tell me if there is any way to permanently destroy a disfiguring growth of superfluous hair on my face and arms? I am 45 years old and the growth is very bad. My daughter, who is 22, has also become troubled. I have been told the new stories are worthless and that nothing is effective except the electric needle. I hesitate to try, as I am told it is painful. I should be glad if you would give me your advice.

CHARLOTTE K.

You are wise to avoid the electric needle. It is a dangerous operation, and, besides being painful, often leaves severe scars. I have frequently stated in these columns that it is better to endure the annoyance than to suffer the pain of the electric needle. I have also warned inquirers against depilatories, which are worse than useless, because the use of the bar to grow out thicker than before.

Recently, however, I have received some authentic and reliable reports about a new method for eradicating it in Japan which has been successfully used in this country. I do not know its name, but a friend of mine, who received a complete cure by its use, told me that she would gladly furnish full particulars, without charge, to anyone who would write her.

If you will write to Miss Gaston Keating Weather Man, New York City, N. Y., Security Bank Building, 42d street and Broadway, New York City, N. Y., inclosing a stamp for reply and mentioning my name, she will send you, quite free of all cost, complete instructions which will undoubtedly enable you to be permanently rid of all trace of the blemish.

"Keep On Swatting The Fly"

New and Ingenious Appliances That Will Help to Exterminate the Greatest Summer Danger to Health and Life

The Fly Lone, a Useful Trap of Sticky Paper with a Piece of Stale Meat Inside to Attract the Insects.

SCIENCE has already amply demonstrated that a large proportion of the infectious diseases from which we suffer are transmitted by house flies.

For instance, 15,000 persons die in New York every year from diseases borne by flies. That is more than one fifth of the total mortality.

The great danger is that, having become familiar with the menace we should cease to fight against it. This year there is nearly as great a horde of flies as ever before, and they will take their toll of thousands of deaths from typhoid fever, tuberculosis and other contagious and infectious diseases.

Therefore, remember that your duty is to keep on swatting the fly.

Housewives Should Sprinkle Garbage with Chloride of Lime or Petroleum to Check Fly Breeding.

on the floor of your room. Several of these appliances are designed to kill the fly and secure its body. Most curious of these is the fly gun. It includes two plates of wood. One of these lies flat and immovable, while the other is held above it by a strong spring.

When you sight the fly you push the lower plate under it, and then release the spring. The upper plate falls with a snap and squashes the fly. It is not likely that a vast number of flies will be disposed of in that way.

A more practical appliance is the fly cone. It is a cone of paper having sticky fly-catching material in the interior. At the smaller end of the cone is placed a piece of stale meat. Flies will swarm into this in enormous quantities. The cone can be crushed up and thrown into the fire. Anybody can make this appliance with a sheet of sticky fly paper.

Throwing chloride of lime or petroleum on garbage, to prevent the breeding of flies, is a valuable precaution, strongly recommended by Dr. L. O. Howard, the famous expert on noxious insects of the United States Department of Agriculture.

All persons having charge of stables should see that the refuse is shielded from the sunlight to check the breeding of flies; should have the refuse removed at least once a day, and, in the meantime, should sprinkle it with chloride of lime or petroleum.

Ninety per cent of all the flies come from horse stables. This is true everywhere except in New York City, where the tides deposit decaying refuse in a continuous pile around the shores of Manhattan Island, and so provide the principal breeding place for the Gotham fly. But unless one lives near a stable or close to the waterfront, the chances are that the flies in that particular house come from the garbage can—one's own or one's neighbor's.

If all windows are tightly screened and garbage cans kept clean the fly nuisance can be largely guarded against. But the most important protective measure is to kill the early flies before they have a chance to multiply. The first flies of the Summer are those which have hibernated during the Winter in warm, dark cracks and crevices. The female fly emerges from her Winter hiding place ready to lay 120 eggs in the first sufficiently filthy repository she can find. Twenty generations or more may be the offspring of one pair of flies in a single season. If all the eggs hatched and all the flies lived, the possible result would be literally octillions of flies. But even such a conservative scientist as Dr. Howard calculates the actual annual average progeny of a single pair of flies at about 8,000,000. Every fly killed now is worth millions killed in September.

All over the country the war on the fly is taking the form of organized local campaigns. The boy scout organizations in many communities have enlisted in the war and are finding in the trapping and slaughter of flies and the cleaning up of towns a vent for much boyish enthusiasm and energy that might otherwise express itself in mischief. Prizes for the largest number of flies caught in a given time are a favorite means of stimulating interest in the effort to exterminate the pest. In Washington, D. C., last year, more than 8,000,000 flies were killed in three weeks, the boy who won the first prize of $25 bringing in a bag of 375,000 flies. In the city of Baltimore, where ten cents a quart was paid by a local association for flies killed, eight barrels of the small insects were destroyed. This year more than 200 cities are organizing active anti-fly campaigns and contests, and tens of thousands of children are learning the lesson of the fly's danger to the community.

Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and many smaller communities are waging effective warfare upon the fly.

The pamphlet issued by the health authorities of the city of Milwaukee contains some very striking epigrams regarding the fly menace.

"It is better," they say, "to screen the cradle and wear a smile than scoff at the precaution and wear mourning.

"Flies in the dining room usually precede nurses in the sickroom.

"Screens on the windows prevent crepe on the door.

"A fly in the milk may mean a fly in the grave."

But the complete solution of the fly problem, whether in city or country, rests largely with the individual householder.

Every time a housefly crawls into the garbage can it gathers thousands, sometimes millions, of disease-bearing germs on its hairy legs and body.

Every time the fly flies from the garbage can to the table it drops thousands of those invisible germs on the food which it touches.

Every time one eats anything which a fly has touched he takes into his system bacteria enough to infect him with one of half a dozen virulent diseases, of which typhoid fever, tuberculosis and Summer complaint of children are the most deadly.

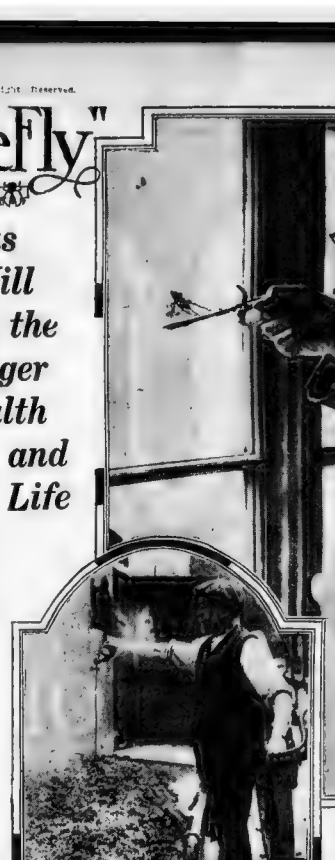
Were it not for the tremendous disease-resisting power of the healthy human organism, the housefly would long ago have exterminated the human race. As it is, thousands and tens of thousands die annually from diseases directly traceable to the common house-fly.

These are the conclusions resulting from a bare ten years of investigation and research by eminent scientific workers under the auspices of the United States Department of Agriculture, the British Government of India, and the authorities of numerous other countries.

A dozen years ago nobody suspected that the fly was anything more than an annoying but harmless pest, and the mischievous boy who raised his hand to swat the "innocent insect" was reprimanded for his cruelty. To-day the tiny insect is recognized as the most dangerous wild animal in the world, and "swat the fly" is the slogan hurled from every platform and pulpit the world over.

It is difficult to realize the danger that lies in such a minute creature as the fly. If the insect could be magnified to the size of a hen, and the germs which it carries enlarged proportionately, these death-dealing bacteria would even then be invisible except with the microscope. Under those circumstances, however, even the naked eye would detect the nauseating filth with which the fly's body and legs are always liberally smeared, and nobody would dream of letting the baby drink the milk that a fly of that size had fallen into. To feed a child milk in which even a single fly has been immersed for only a few seconds is deliberately to invite disease.

What happens when a fly drops into the milk is strikingly illustrated in experiments made by two eminent bacteriologists, W. N. Eaten and C. J. Mason, as reported by Dr. Howard. Eighteen flies found hovering about a garbage can were caught with a sterilized bottle into which was poured sterilized water. The bottle was shaken a moment so that the bacteria were washed from the bodies of the insects, just as they are washed off when the fly is struggling in the milk pitcher.



Stable Refuse Should Be Sprinkled with a Disinfectant Pending Its Removal.

The Fly Gun, an Ingenious Apparatus That Kills the Insect and Secures Its Body.

A careful count of the bacteria in a given quantity of the water thus contaminated showed 118,800,000 germs, of which considerably more than half were of disease-producing types—an average of 6,00,000 germs per fly. From another catch of ninety-four flies found near a swill barrel 2,660,000 germs per fly were obtained. In all 414 flies were caught and tested for bacteria, producing an average of almost 1,230,000 on the body and legs of every fly.

Our soldiers died by hundreds of typhoid fever in the camps at Chickamauga and Camp Alger during the Spanish war. Modern science had not then learned what was found a little later to be the fact—that it was the flies that carried the disease and caused the tremendous mortality among the troops. It was recalled afterward, when an investigation was being made into the causes of typhoid, that flies with their feet whitened by the lime that had been used to disinfect the pits and trenches had been frequently noticed walking over the food that the soldiers ate. The officers' mess tents were protected by screens and the officers suffered proportionately very much less from typhoid than did the enlisted men. And the best proof of all of the complicity of the fly in the typhoid epidemic was the fact that when the fly disappeared with the approach of cold weather the disease also disappeared.

Typhoid had always been known as a hot weather disease, although there was no apparent reason why the tiny bacillus which conveys this infection should be more active at one temperature than at another. It was the suspicion that the fly might have had something to do with it that led to the investigations which have resulted in an unshakable indictment being drawn up against the insect—on page one] ish justifies the charge made by Dr. W. J. Crumbine, secretary of the Kansas State Board of Health, that "Flies kill more American soldiers than all the Spanish bullets in 1898."

Therefore, bear in mind this rule:

"Keep on swatting that fly!"

Proof That Life May Exist at Absolute Zero

ABSOLUTE zero, the point at which there is no heat whatever, has been fixed by scientists at 273 degrees below zero Centigrade, or about 530 degrees below zero Fahrenheit.

This amazing state of coldness has been produced by Professor Kamerling Onnes at his laboratory in the University of Leyden, Holland. One of the interesting results of this experiment has been to prove that life is not extinguished by this degree of cold.

The theory of "panspermy" advanced by Professor Svante Arrhenius and other scientists is, therefore, proved tenable. According to this theory, life has been carried from star to star and from planet to planet through space, in the form of microscopic germs driven by the power of light. The objection immediately offered to this theory was that the absolute zero of space would be fatal to the germs. This objection is now disposed of.

Heat is the energy of molecular motion, and at absolute zero the molecules are devoid of all motion.

In the cold-producing plant at Leyden gases of successively lower liquefying points are attacked, one after the other, by evaporation of each being used to absorb heat from the next in the series. This is called at Leyden a "cascade," and includes five "cycles." The gases used, in their order, being methyl chlorid, ethylene, oxygen, hydrogen and helium, with the producing successively of temperatures of 90, 160, 210, 250 and 273 degrees below zero Centigrade.

Scientists of all countries may study at Leyden these different phenomena:

(1) The electric conductibility of metals at [illegible] degree.

(2) Temporary suspension of life in germs, as M. P. Becquerel has tried to see whether, at very low temperatures, the life of seeds could be suspended for a definite period and resumed again at the observer's pleasure. The law of the continuity of such phenomena so often invoked by physiologists would seem to be at fault. According to it, life is a series of uninterrupted vital phenomena which in no case can undergo the slightest suspension without the intervention of death.

The experiments of Becquerel do not square with this law. As Armand Gautier says, seeds, or even the lower animals, may often be considered as machines at rest but ready to run—clocks taken to pieces that require only to be put together again.

Such experiments obviate one of the objections made to the theory of panspermy," according to which the germs of life fill all space. These germs, it is said, would be exposed during their course to the intense cold of interstellar space, which they could not withstand. Now it has been proved that a temperature of 273 degrees does not abolish the germinative faculty.

(3) The specific heats of solids at low temperatures. Investigations undertaken by Nernst and his pupils show that the specific heats diminish rapidly when the temperature falls.

Professor D'Arsonval, the famous French scientist, in commenting on the Leyden achievements, points out that the constitution of matter and the nature of electricity may be discovered by studying them in the neighborhood of absolute zero. The discoveries of Curie and others have shown us that the atom is like a solar system in miniature.

The atom is formed by the incon[illegible]ceivably rapid rotations of electric corpuscles, which contain, despite their minuteness, energies of tremend[illegible]us violence.

Thus in an atom of hydrogen, which is thousands of times heavier than the billion billionth part of a milligramme, there are thousands of these tiny bodies called "electrons," charged with negative electricity gravitating round a kernel charged with positive electricity. Professor Lodge has said that there is enough energy in a grain of hydrogen to raise the British navy to the top of the Himalaya Mountains.

The electrons revolve about one another at the speed of several million billion times a second. Professor D'Arsonval suggests that by passing electric currents through bodies at low temperatures such as have been obtained at Leyden we may succeed in changing the composition of the atom and the nature of [illegible]

We Will Prove at Our Own Expense That It Is No Longer Necessary to Be Thin, Scrawny and Undeveloped

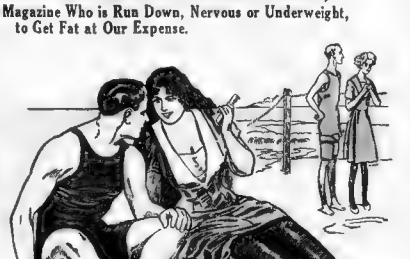
WE INVITE EVERY THIN MAN AND WOMAN HERE,

Every Reader of This Magazine Who is Run Down, Nervous or Underweight, to Get Fat at Our Expense.

This is a generous offer to every thin man or woman reading this paper. We positively guarantee to increase your weight in your own satisfaction or no pay. Think that over—think what it means. At our own risk we offer to put 10, 15, yes, 30 pounds of good, solid "stay there" flesh on your bones, to fill out hollow cheeks, neck or bust, to get rid of that "rundown" look, to rejuvenate and revitalize your whole body until it tingles with vibrant energy; to do this without drastic diet, "tonics," severe physical culture "stunts," detention from business or any irksome requirements—if we fail it costs you nothing.

We particularly wish to hear from the excessively thin, those who know the humiliation and embarrassment which only skinny people have to suffer in silence. We want to send a free 50-cent package of our new discovery to the people who are called "stick" and "bean poles," to bony women, whose clothes never look "anyhow," no matter how expensively dressed, to the skinny men who fail to gain social or business recognition on account of their starved appearance. We care not whether you have been thin from birth, whether you have lost flesh through sickness, how many flesh builders you have experimented with. We take the risk and assume it cheerfully. If we can not put pounds and pounds of healthy flesh on your frame we don't want your money.

How can we do this? We will tell you: Science has discovered a remarkable concentrated treatment, which increases cell growth, the very substance of which our bodies are made—a treatment that makes indigestion and sour stomach troubles disappear as if by magic and makes an old dyspeptic or a sufferer from weak nerves or lack of vitality feel like a 2-year-old. This new treatment which has proved a boon to every thin person it tried Sargol. Don't forget the name—S-A-R-G-O-L. Nothing like it has ever been produced before. It is a revelation to women who have never been able to appear stylish in anything they wear look well in their best gowns. It is a godsend to every man who is under weight or is lacking in nerve force or energy. It can make a beautiful and well-rounded figure of symmetrical proportions, of weight to suit you and you feel just right, full of the vim, vigor and energy of perfect health. Sargol is a concentrated, scientific flesh builder, a tissue builder, a nerve builder and a blood enricher. It is the most wonderful combination of flesh producing elements ever discovered. It is almost magical in its effects. Within a few days after you take the first dose you can see and feel the change and before you have used one package the transformation is often astonishing. Cut out the coupon below and it may be the means of bringing you the very thing you have been longing for. Why not begin today and be convinced? Why not write us a postal or a letter and say: "Mail me a trial package of Sargol, as per your offer in Pictorial Review," and we will send you a package free, in plain wrapper, by return mail. Then when you have gained the flesh and strength and have become the "perfect thing" you desire, you can tell your friends how you gained it. Don't hesitate because you fear we cannot do as we agree. Thousands of people have taken advantage of our offer and are now enjoying perfect health and a body full of flesh. Don't be one of those who have been starved—and who will scorn to the virtues of this marvelous preparation!



"Gee! Look at that pair of skinny scarecrows! Why don't they try Sargol!"

WHAT SARGOL HAS DONE FOR OTHERS

We will mail you the Free 50-cent package of Sargol, we will send you copies of letters received from grateful patrons, reporting actual gains in solid, healthy, permanent flesh, of from ten to over thirty pounds.

We give here a few interesting figures from reports which are being received daily.

REV. GEORGE W. DAVIS says:

"I have made a faithful trial of the Sargol treatment and must say it has brought to me new life and vigor. I have gained twenty pounds and now weigh 170 pounds and what is better I have gained days of my youthful health. It has been the turning point of my life. My health is now fine. I don't have to take any medicine at all and never want to again."

MRS. A. I. RODENHEISER writes:

"I have gained tremendously since I took Sargol, for I only weighed about 103 pounds when I began using it and now I weigh 130 pounds, so nearly that makes 24 pounds. I feel stronger and looking better than ever before, and now I carry rosy cheeks, which is something I could never say before."

"My girl friends who have been used in seeing me with a thin, long face, say that I am looking better than they have ever seen me before, and father and mother are so well pleased to think I have got to look so well and weigh so heavy for me."

F. GAGNON writes:

"Here is my secret after taking the Sargol treatment, I am a man 47 years of age, and was all run down in the system. I had to quit work as I could not do anything. I had so much pain in my stomach and kidneys. I took a new treatment with Sargol. I took a few bottles and gained 22 pounds with the Sargol treatment. I cannot tell you how happy I feel. All my children are saying I look fine. My face has a good color and I never was so happy in my life."

SARGOL SHOULD DO THE SAME FOR YOU

The new treatment invariably fills out contracted hollows, rounds the figure into graceful curves, clears the complexion and turned into good, solid healthy flesh instead of passing through the system undigested and unassimilated.

It is a thoroughly scientific principle, this reward, and built up the thin, weak and debilitated without any excessive dosing. In many conditions it is better than cod liver oil and certainly is much pleasanter to take.

Send for the 50-cent box to-day. Convince us by your prompt acceptance of this offer that you are writing in good faith and really desire to gain in weight. The 50-cent package which we will send you free will be in proportion to you. We are glad to do this as we are sure we can have thousands of our readers convinced that Sargol is the most wonderful flesh producer ever discovered, and that it has no equal. We could not publish this offer if we were not prepared to live up to it. It is only for introductory purposes that we make it at this rate. Don't delay. Cut out the coupon below and mail it now. We are glad to make such an offer and back it by our guarantee to you in order to help pay distribution expenses. Take our word, you'll never regret it.

Two Babies, and How They Were Born

Copyright, 1912, by American-Journal-Examiner.
Great Britain Rights Reserved.

Which Baby Has the Better Chance? What Develops Genius in a Child?

The Handicap of Wealth Inherited. The Little Astor Baby Born Last Week With a Three-Million-Dollar Load of Gold Weighing It Down!

AST Wednesday morning in New York City a baby was born and was named John Jacob Astor VI.

The baby's father, John Jacob Astor V., was drowned on the Titanic and left a will which gave three millions to this baby that has just arrived.

Not much more than a hundred years ago an ancestor of this baby bought land on Manhattan Island. Since then the birth of millions of other babies on that island has added tens of millions of dollars in value to that land. And so the Astors of to-day are worth tens of millions, having done no work.

And this little new Astor arrives with three millions at least to make efforts seem useless. three millions at least to condemn him to a waste of life—and many more millions, perhaps, if his mother decides through a lawsuit to fight the other Astor boy born of a different mother.

* * *

A "fine writer" with time and patience to spare might make an interesting picture contrasting the birth of John Jacob Astor VI. with some poor baby born the same hour in some one of the poorest Astor tenement houses over on the East Side.

The picture of these two births would show you many interesting contrasts.

In the Astor home you would find at least two highly paid doctors on hand for days in advance, with nurses engaged and every detail prepared —masses of beautiful clothing for the child, masses of beautiful flowers for the mother, dozens of servants walking on tip-toe, idle, gaping crowds standing in front of the house.

And in another room, at the same hour, you would see born one of the babies whose arrival helps to build up the Astor fortune and the fortune of all other land owners.

You would see that other baby arriving, unwelcome perhaps, in poverty and in sorrow. The father would be at his work unable to return, unable to forfeit a day's pay. A child of ten would be sent in haste for a midwife, called only at the last moment to save expense.

The new-born baby would be hastily washed, hastily wrapped in some convenient piece of linen or flannel, and laid on the bed beside its suffering mother, while the midwife would hurry away, and the oldest child, almost a baby herself, would be called upon in feeble tones by the mother to help in the first few dreadful hours.

* * *

The angels above can look through the copper roof on the Astor house and the tin roof on the tenement and see into the rooms where the babies are born, and if the angels did not understand conditions down here they would form very false opinions about the opportunities, the happiness and the probable future of the two babies that we have described.

The Astor baby, it is true, lies in silk and in lace, and trained nurses watch him.

The poor baby lies in rough linen or flannel, and an older sister holds him and wonders about him as the mother lies weak and exhausted.

The Astor mother is watched, protected with all the care of science. For days she will be forbidden to move. For weeks all effort will be forbidden.

The poor mother will be on her knees scrubbing, three days, and perhaps one day, after her baby is born. Her health will be injured permanently because she has neither the scientific knowledge nor the time to care for herself.

Sad is the contrast between the future of these two babies and their two mothers.

* * *

There is another side of the picture that must also be considered.

Conditions in this world are not as unjust, as unfair as they seem.

That baby with its little fist doubled up against its mouth lying at the foot of the bed in the tenement house, wrapped in an old, rough piece of flannel, has, perhaps, a better chance in the world than the Astor baby with all his finery and the millions that are left for him to save or to squander.

The love that the poor mother gives to her child is as great as that given by any mother to any child. And children thrive and grow upon the love of the mother.

The rich baby will be swamped and dazed with toys and flattery and servility.

The poor baby will see wonders in the rag doll, and wonders in the superior wisdom of the little sister nurse.

The imagination of the rich child will be stunted and kept back by TOO MUCH.

The imagination and ambition of the poor child will be awakened and stimulated by poverty, by TOO LITTLE.

The rich baby will have everything, and to that boy it will never seem worth while to work or to try.

The poor baby will have nothing, and for everything it gets it must rely upon its own effort.

The poor child will try.

The rich child will not try.

Therefore, the poor child will be the happier, for all happiness on this earth comes from effort, FROM TRYING.

Mysterious is the spark of genius that lifts one human being to the heights of wonderful achievement. We do not know whence it comes, but we do know that it can be killed beyond resuscitation—and too much wealth is the destroyer of genius.

* * *

Contrast the birth of that Astor baby with another birth, not with yesterday's birth in a tenement. Contrast the birth of this Astor baby with the birth of another baby early in the last century—the baby named Abraham Lincoln.

Lincoln was born in a hut of one room with a dirt floor, with no window. His mother and father were poverty stricken. His mother probably could not read or write.

You know what Lincoln did.

Do you suppose that he would have done his work if he had been born as that Astor baby was born and crushed at his birth with the heavy weight of three millions of dollars?

No greater curse or handicap can come to a child than the curse of great wealth. Let that be the consolation of those that foolishly envy poor little John Jacob Astor VI., of those foolish enough to wish for their own children the sad fate that meets him at birth. Many thousands of babies were born on this earth in the hour that saw his birth. Very few of them have a chance as poor as his chance of ever doing anything really worth while in this world.

The Factors in Our Civilization That Increase Cancer

A Distinguished English Scientist Shows That the Modern Growth of Cancer Follows Excess in Use of Meat, Alcohol and Hot Food and Drinks

THE Hon Rollo Russell, of England, brother of the somewhat eccentric Earl Russell, has published a most interesting little book pointing to the possibilities of checking the alarming growth of cancer throughout the civilized world. Mr. Russell is well known in England as a scientific investigator.

His book is entitled, "Preventable Cancer: A Statistical Research" (Longmans, Green & Co.)

This publication is aimed to show that the great modern increase of cancer is due to the use of alcohol, large quantities of meat in the diet and very hot food and drink. The abundant statistics quoted by Mr. Russell appear to prove his argument completely.

He shows that the great increase in cancer began when the type of diet he describes became general in highly civilized communities. Now if we avoid excess in the articles mentioned and adhere to a cool, non-toxic diet we may, he argues, at least get rid of the modern increase in cancer cases, which amounts probably to half of them.

Mr. Russell's statistics show that the principal predisposing causes of cancer are in order of importance as follows: Whiskey, beer and cider, wine, meat, tea and coffee, very hot food and drinks.

The classes of men that suffer least from cancer are those who abstain from alcohol and meat. Those who enjoy the greatest immunity are: Doukhobors (a Russian sect), monks, vegetarians, total abstainers, ministers, physicians.

The occupations that have the greatest liability to cancer are in order of frequency: Chimney sweeps, workers in tar, saloon keepers, brewers, butchers, cabmen, peddlers, commercial travellers.

The theory based upon these facts is that the excessively stimulating diet causes irritation at various places along the alimentary canal and there produces an abnormal cell growth, which is generally understood to be the beginning of cancer. This theory agrees with medical researches into the disease.

Mr. Russell's conclusions from his studies and statistical tables are here summarized.

In the first place, he points out that cancer mortality varies from the appalling rate of one in seven of all deaths in some communities to extreme rarity in others, according to the habits of the community. It is by studying the habits of the immune that he sees the best way of reducing the terrible cancer mortality of civilized Europe and America.

Apart from exceptional customs, it scarcely exists among people and in districts and countries where the diet is natural, cool, without irritation or stimulant adjuncts. The use of water as the staple drink has a valuable effect in producing immunity.

Cancer has shown a very much larger prevalence in rich than in poor countries and in the rich or generally thriving districts than in the poor districts of civilized countries. But this distinction tends to become obliterated where the mass of the laboring population adopts a rich fare, including adjuncts such as beer, wine and spirits, flesh, coffee, tea, tobacco and various foods usually taken at high temperature, much above what the outer skin can bear. In some cities, where the industrial population passes the well-to-do in alcoholism and kindred forms of indulgence, it has the higher rate of cancer.

The malady shows a real and regular increase in all civilized countries during the last fifty years, or since records have been kept. This increase corresponds with the regular and very large increase in the consumption of stimulant meats and drinks, of hot foods and drinks, and with increased consumption now far exceeding physical requirements, of adjuncts of many sorts, including unwholesome forms of sugar, pickles, drugs, preservatives and adulterants, salt (in excess), strong cheese, condiments and tobacco.

Cancer has steadily and rapidly increased with the steady and rapid increase of the consumption of rich foods and hot or toxic drinks in Western Europe. When races among whom cancer has not been prevalent adopt this fare they quickly become subject to the disease. Where cancer is common, as in France or England, groups or societies, adopting a plain fare, without rich, hot or toxic foods or drinks, quickly become almost immune.

The rapid increase of the disease among males during the last fifty years has been contemporary with the rapid increase of the consumption of hot and toxic drinks, in addition to the excessive alcohol and other adjuncts to a normal, staple diet.

Some of the very highest rates are found in the prosperous peasantries of Switzerland, Holland, Normandy, the North of Ireland, South Germany and Norway. These people are not all large meat eaters, but their consumption of proteid in cheese is high above the average.

Cancer is commonly a product of lesions or influences upon the internal organs due to unnatural, excessive or inappropriate food or drink, affecting the lining membrane, blood, tissues and skin.

Among these injurious substances are fermented liquors, animal and other proteids in long and continuous excess; highly salted and toxic food and drinks, hot foods and drinks much above blood temperature, and apparently highly acid drinks, such as some wine, and some metals or minerals of which arsenic is an acknowledged example. The use of cold water as a drink has every year been more and more replaced by hot and artificial liquors.

The very close connection of the digestive organs with the blood, tissues and skin permits cancer to appear in various parts of the body, though the original mischief of causation of susceptibility may have arisen in those organs. The influence of injurious foods and drinks must be considered not only in regard to the actual starting of new growths, but also in regard to the susceptible or hyperaesthetic abnormal state produced by long-continued erroneous habits generating abnormality or senescence in the tissues.

In regard to occupations, cancer shows a maximum prevalence in those trades or occupations where there is a maximum consumption of rich or stimulating foods or both, and especially of alcohol, with certain beers or acid or fortified cider. The frequency of the disease diminishes on the whole regularly with the diminution of stimulating or excessive fare, according to classes. The trades where intemperance is signified by many deaths from alcoholism have the highest rate of cancer. The most temperate classes have the lowest rate, and the disease almost entirely ceases to exist among religious societies living continuously under a strict rule of simplicity in diet.

The Doukhobors, a Russian Sect, Abstaining from Meat and Alcohol and Following a Simple Life, Are Practically Free from Cancer.

Diagram Showing the Parts Most Frequently Attacked by Cancer in Man, Proving the Connection Between the Disease and Abuse of the Digestive System.

Cancer Deaths Per Million Living in Chief European Countries, Showing That the Highest Rate Coincides with the Greatest Prosperity.

The Tibetans, Who Eat Large Quantities of Yak Meat and Tea, Sufffer Considerably from Cancer, While Neighboring Asiatic Races Who Are Vegetarians Are Remarkably Fee from It.

On the other hand, a large number of temperate and partially abstinent persons die of cancer, but they have nearly all accustomed themselves to non-alcoholic toxic drinks (such as tea and coffee), to food and drink at scalding temperatures, and to undue frequency of meals. Bruises or blows and tight articles of dress can certainly start the disease in the predisposed.

It is clear that many cancers are preventable, and some are being now prevented by hygienic rules. Thus, cancer of the mouth among the Hindoos will be prevented by the cessation of the habit of chewing a highly irritating and toxic composition (betel nut) and of their hemp habit. The disuse of the kangri, a basket containing hot charcoal, carried next to their skins by the natives of Cashmere, will put an end to kangri burn cancer.

The regulations now in force with regard to operatives in the coal tar industry will stop the cancerous developments on the hands of the men. The disuse of clay pipes would save many smokers from lip cancer. Moderation in tobacco smoking may save many more from cancer of the lip, jaw, throat and esophagus. In some cases filing of the points of sharp teeth will prevent occurrence in the mouth. Greater care in the application of the X-ray or of radium for lupus, ringworm or other diseases will prevent the danger of radium cancer.

Rules for the more careful handling of soot by gardeners and others will prevent cancer from occurring in a class otherwise less liable than most. In chimney sweeps greater cleanliness and abstinence from alcoholic liquors will reduce their cancer mortality probably below that of the average of occupied persons. The occupation of chimney sweep is not an important one in America.

Greater care in the prescription of arsenic as a drug and strict enforcement of the law against the use of arsenic in beer will reduce the number of victims in whom this metal starts a dangerous growth. More caution is needed both in curative processes, in trades and in the handling by the public of strong chemicals or tarry or antiseptic and corrosive materials.

Long-continued exposure to strong heat, as from locomotives or furnaces, ought also to be guarded against, as cases have occurred in the parts of the body most continuously exposed to intense heat of fires. Pressure of any tight article of dress, corsets, belts, etc., causes internal distortion and interferes with circulation; it may have the effect of bruises in some cases.

Cancer of the stomach, the site commonest in men, does not occur in certain races and districts, where simple fare at a low temperature is the rule.

Considering all the conditions in which the malady arises, and by which it is effected, it appears certain that it is in the main, apart from persistent and great external irritation of the skin, produced by unnatural and inappropriate food and drink, and that it is a product of common errors in this respect. The consumption of very hot and of toxic matter is at present enormous in Europe and America, in addition to excess of ordinary foods. Refreshments, such as tea, between meals, are much more habitual, especially among young men, than formerly.

In view of the rapidity with which hitherto unaffected tribes have become subject to attack on adopting European fare, and in view of the exemption of religious and other societies in the midst of nations heavily suffering, and considering many other facts, some of which show the importance of the particular condition of the body, it seems certain that cancer is to a very great extent preventable, and preventable by the same personal and national hygiene which will prevent many other serious and fatal maladies caused chiefly by improper food and drink.

Considering the comparative freedom of communities which have been removed from ordinary to frugal diet late in life there is very great encouragement to expect that this change may, wherever adopted, save the great majority who would otherwise suffer.

Many of the classes now most free from cancer are healthiest in other respects, and free from a very large series of diseases dependent upon alcoholism and intemperance in the broadest sense. They are largely free from tuberculosis and many diseases of the digestive tract, liver, kidneys, nerves, brain and skin. On the other hand, many of those most subject to such maladies are most subject to cancer.

The large use of preserved, highly adulterated, tinned and commercially medicated articles has, no doubt, something to do with the destruction of digestion and health, and the vast quantities of advertised drugs used to counteract them add to the mischief. Among the most damaging of all changes in the last fifty years, probably the substitution of artificial drinks for cold water is the most widespread.

Although, as in gout, the influence of heredity exists, it does not appear sufficiently strong in the case of cancer to preclude the hope that, even where the malady is widely prevalent, it may be very largely reduced in succeeding generations.

Many of the most distressing and fatal maladies, such as rheumatism, heart disease, epilepsy, paralysis and others, would, at the same time, decline. There can be no safer maxim for the diminution of cancer than approximation to the most reasonable and pleasant fare common in countries or communities which are free from the evil. Conquest of predisposition is possible." But the degree of justifiable hope will depend on the strength of the rational will.

A SONG--"JUST YOU"--By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

All the selfish joys of earth,
I am getting through---
That which used to lure and lead
Now I pass and give no heed;
Only one thing seems to be of worth---
Just you.

* * *

Not for me the lonely height,
And the larger view.
Lowlier ways seem fair and wide,
While we wander side by side.
One thing makes the whole world bright;
Just you.

* * *

Not for distant goals I run,
No great aim pursue;
Most of earth's ambitions seem
Like the shadow of a dream.
All the world seems one to me---
Just you.

Adventures of the Hunters

Another Palpitating Chapter in the Thrilling Story of a Family's Quest of a Summer Resort

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

At the outset Hunter preferred the beach, which explains why they went to the mountains where Mrs. Hunter's mountain dress was called a Texas Tommy costume, whereupon they hurried to a beach. There a cabin chancery was such bad odor they fled to a farm where bees, dirt and a fake mephitis drove them to Lake Winnegeantis. At the charming spot a peroxide widow spoiled the scenery for Mrs. Hunter and they tried camping out, but the rains fell and the floods came and they went to a really fashionable resort

CHAPTER VI.

"Ma, I wanter go barefoot"——

"Hush, Willie," said Mrs. Hunter.

"Maw, can't I take off this collar and necktie"——

"No, no Willie, this is a fashionable place here, and all the little boys dress up. Don't you want to go around all dressed up nice"——

Awr, this is a rotten dump, I wisht I was campin' out."

"No no I, son," put in Mr. Hunter.

"Well John Hunter, if you want to go back and sleep in a puddle and eat cinders and insects and—and drink juice of you-know-what, why go right ahead. I'm here at fashionable Rasport in the Swellatonia where there is everything one can ask for"——

"But few can pay for," put in Hunter

"——and I am going to stay here for the remainder of the season," she continued, not minding the interruption

"Come, John, we must dress for dinner"

"Do I look undressed?" asked Hunter, peevishly

"I hope you don't think you are dressed for dinner in those flannel trousers and that blazer and red tie"——

"I'm dressed for dinner, breakfast, supper, lunch and everything else except bed. I suppose, seeing they don't have dinner here until 8 o'clock, that pajamas is the proper costume"——

But he went up to his rooms and climbed into his evening clothes.

"Hook me up, please," said Mrs. Hunter.

There were eight minutes of tugging and muttering and exclamations.

"I've split eighteen of my ten fingernails," growled Hunter. "I used to object to low cut gowns, but they can't cut 'em low enough for me now, since every inch off the top means so many less hooks to chase into those wriggly little eyes. Wait a minute, now, I've ruined this collar and shirt bosom. I'll have to get into another"

After a long and tiresome dinner in a stuffy dining room, many of the guests sauntered out on the veranda to play bridge. Hunter was paired off with a chattering young thing who couldn't keep her mind on the game a minute. Mrs. Hunter was given a red-faced old retired army man, who played bridge as he fought battles, with nothing else on his mind. It was not exactly a successful game

"Well, you didn't have a slam, Colonel," chattered the girl

"I didn't say I did, Miss, I said something that rhymed with it!" he growled

"What's trumps?——They say the moonlight bathing is just dandy here——what? Shall you play? Oh yes, of course if you want to, that's what we are going here for, isn't it?——Did you see the poker game in the 'Traveling Salesman?' Wasn't it a corker ——Oh, was that your ace, Mr. Hunter? Excuse me, I thought it was the Colonel's or I wouldn't have trumped it, forgive me, Mr. Hunter——do you know, it is so easy to remember your name—it makes one rather thirsty, don't you think? What? push that button there? Oh, dear me, no, I wasn't hinting at all, but if you all intend to, just a little Scotch highball for mine——who me? Why no, that was Mr. Hunter's ace, Colonel—I did? Did I really trump it? Oh, yes, I remember now, of course if that is so I have to lead, dear me, I don't know what to lead—I wish I knew this game well enough to know what to lead I led a trump? Is that so? Hearts trumps? Goodness I wish someone had told me that before. Oh, see the moon breaking out through the clouds, it is going to be just dandy for a moonlight frolic in the surf. After this hand I think ——Oh, you mean this, Mrs. Hunter, to take my king——I didn't know the ace hadn't been played——as I said I think I will take a moonlight splash in the surf after this game—what's that Colonel? Oh, dear me, no, you are not detaining me."

The chattering girl said a lot more just like this before the game was ended, then it broke up. The Colonel went over in the corner and kept three waiters busy for an hour, Mrs. Hunter went into the ball room to watch the hop. Hunter had a brilliant idea that a moonlight frolic in the surf would be a very pleasant thing

"My, how did you ever think of such a thing" asked the chatty girl when she saw Hunter spring into the surf. "Now isn't it strange we should both have the same idea? Will you teach me to swim"'

Half an hour later the chatty girl was gurgling with delight and the salt spray in her mouth while Hunter was holding her up with both arms and telling her she was floating splendidly

Two hours later, when Hunter got to his room, Mrs. Hunter had retired

"I suppose," she sniffed, "you have been down in the cafe, drinking with a lot of sports"

"Uh-huh," said Hunter, as he prepared to retire

"You have? Well, I wouldn't brag of it," his wife scolded, but it puzzled her a bit because she never knew him to admit anything like that before

Under the trees the next forenoon a number of the guests were watching the tennis. Hunter and his wife were there. So was Willie, still angry because he couldn't go barefoot.

"Say, Pa," he shouted shrilly, "don't that woman with the yeller hair look like your La'lapaloosa over to the Sendfermaginnis house"——

Hunter clapped his hand over Willie's mouth.

"Don't talk so much among older people," he hissed. "Here," he added, thrusting a coin in Willie's hand, "run down the street and get some ice cream and see the movies and"——

But Willie was dashing down the street

Meanwhile Mrs. Hunter gave a violent start and scanned the crowd as a mariner would scan the horizon. "If that washed out brazen peroxide widow has followed us——oh, no, that isn't the one," and she actually smiled and began to chat with the chattery girl who had played bridge—almost—the night before.

"This is just a splendid time to go in bathing," Mrs. Hunter suggested.

Hunter looked wild-eyed at the chatty girl.

"Oh, no, Mrs. Hunter, not now. It is so much more fun in the moonlight. Why, Mr. Hunter is a lovely swimmer and so strong, he actually taught me to float last night, held me in his arms—oh, it was just grand! I've got three chums who are crazy to have him teach them to float. I am going to introduce them, may, I, Mr. Hunter? And we'll all go in to-night"'

Mrs. Hunter smiled one of the sort of smiles the minister smiles when some one sits on his hat.

"Yes," she said, as sweetly as all fifty-seven varieties, "we'll ALL go in to-night."

"I think," said Mrs. Hunter, somewhat later, when she and her husband sat alone on the veranda, "I think this hotel is really too stuffy, and expensive, and it is so much trouble to dress, and as long as you don't like it and complained about it"——

"Who complained about it? I? Not on your life, I never said a word against the place," objected Hunter. "I like to dress for dinner, it is so refined, and the prices are quite reasonable. You said you were going to stay here the remainder of the season. I don't blame you. I intend to stay, it's a great place"——

"And so you were down in the cafe drinking with the sports——last night, NOT," hissed Mrs. Hunter "You love the place now, just LOVE it. Last night you were ready to burn it. You have such strong arms and you're going to teach a lot more silly girls to FLOAT. You are going to hold their willowy and lithesome forms in your strong arms——NEVER. First it was a catty young widow, now it is a lot of love-sick girls. You are going to pack our trunks and we are going to spend the remainder of the Summer in a bungalow, in a BUNGALOW, and ALONE, do you understand?"

"Oh, no, now be reasonable," urged Hunter. "I don't want to make a row, but I simply WON'T leave the Swellatonia, and that's FINAL!"

The Hunters left on a late afternoon train for Slaphurst, the noted Summer Bungalow colony,

(This will be continued next Sunday.)

No. 2—The Park Comedian

By William F. Kirk.

HE was the Park Comedian. He had been genuinely funny for many years. He had made thousands laugh. If you should chance to visit the parks some warm afternoon, where hopelessly old men creep their bones around on the benches and where hopeless young men read the want ads, you would find [illegible] particular Park Comedian.

He was tall and slender [illegible] be tall slender because he [illegible]

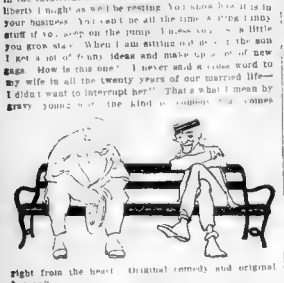
"This is a fine month to [illegible] him on the bench.

"It's always a fine one [illegible] he chuckled. "Gosh, [illegible] slap on the [illegible] been kidding [illegible] their sea [illegible] I don't blame the [illegible] my stuff. I [illegible] put it over the footlights until I found that it made me laugh myself. I'm a hard audience, young man, a very hard audience. [illegible] a man can't put on this theatrical stunt for twenty years, rain or shine, he gets to be a pretty wise fish. Before you can hand him a laugh you have to give him the real McCoy brand of humor. It's gravy, and the meat and marrow. You get me?"

I got you. I told the [illegible] "Tell me something that [illegible] good laugh [illegible] first and [illegible]

The Park Comedian [illegible] quails.

"It might seem funny to you that I am out here in this park with so many fellows around me that are down and out, but this has been a kind of tough year in the theatrical business, and I thought while I was at liberty I might as well be resting. You know how it is in your business. You can't be all the time a-cracking funny stuff. I was asleep on the pump. I was out in a little grass plot. When I am sitting out here in the sun I get a lot of funny ideas and make up a lot of new gags. How is this one? I never said a word to my wife in all the twenty years of our married life—I didn't want to interrupt her!' That's what I mean by gravy. [illegible] the kind of comedy that comes right from the heart. Original comedy and original humor."



The Park Comedian was in deadly earnest, or at least in as deadly earnest as a comedian can be.

"It [illegible] boards unless [illegible] plained. [illegible] dance his legs off [illegible] all day looking [illegible] really good [illegible] screams, one [illegible] fire,' is worth a million times [illegible] been used since [illegible] another one that I [illegible] My father wore baby clothes. Here's another one that I [illegible] suited was because [illegible] or blast.

"But that [illegible] taken from a monologue belonging to Sat Wills. I have heard him [illegible] three times [illegible] The [illegible] three nights [illegible] You [illegible] sert [illegible] those [illegible] see. That's why [illegible] I was the fat man of them all and [illegible] think before [illegible] been a [illegible] again [illegible] laughs.

Learn to Swim

How to Acquire This Useful Art Without the Aid of an Ocean.

Every one should learn to swim.

The man who can swim is often able to take to the water and thus escape burglars and robbers.

Learning to swim, usually requires an ocean, but by the plan we shall explain in your own home.

Put on a bathing suit to give local color. For this purpose the one in which the dye runs best.

Lie face downward on a piano stool and wave your arms and legs until you have learned to swim.

Simple, isn't it?

Later you may attach a pedometer to your legs. This will show you how far you have swum in an hour. Fifty miles in 60 minutes is a fair average.

By this method you will notice you can swim faster than in the water.

Favorite Stories of Folks You Know

THE man with the bronzed face and the rolling eye was enthralling his friends with a nerve-racking sea story when Buttinski entered just in time to hear him say:

"And so my ship went down with all hands."

"Went down?" queried Buttinski, "but where were you?"

"I was in the captain's cabin at the time," said the skipper. "We sank, and scarcely a ripple was left to mark the spot."

"Tough luck," continued Buttinski, "but I suppose you forced your way out of the cabin and managed to swim ashore. Or were you taken off by a passing vessel?"

No, I wasn't," replied the salt. "I just stood where I was."

But look here, old boy," challenged Buttinski, "you say you were locked in the cabin and made no effort to escape, and yet here you are safe and sound before us. What is this a tale of the horse marines?"

"Nope. It's a tale of the submarines."

"I CAN'T keep the visitors from coming up," sighed the office boy dejectedly to the editor. "When I say you're out they don't believe me. They insist that they must see you right away."

"Well, said the editor, "just tell them that's what they all say. I don't care if you get fresh with them—give 'em anything. I must have quiet at any cost."

That afternoon there called at the office a rather important looking lady. She wanted to see the editor but the boy assured her that was impossible.

"But I must see him!" she protested. "I'm his wife!"

"That's what they all say!" retorted the boy, as he slammed the door.

As I passed the office yesterday morning I noticed a little sign outside with the words, "Boy wanted."

It proved to be true and the sputtering Britisher was put out. A spectator of the incident asked the American how he knew the beefeater had a third-class ticket.

"Well, exclaimed the composed Yankee, "it was sticking out of his pocket, and I noticed that it was the same color as mine."

"Well, madam, how do they look to you?"

"How do what look to me?" she said.

"Why, the teeth I just filled."

Oh I forgot about the teeth. She even examined teeth for the hand glass.

Well, what were you looking at each time I gave you the mirror?"

A CHICAGO man in London was invited to a ball where everybody except himself talked with an exceedingly broad a, as in Boston, and of course as everybody does in London. The accent was puzzling to his Chicago ears, but the guest did his best.

He danced a waltz with the wife of his host. The lady spoke with an exceptionally broad accent, and she ran somewhat to flesh. When they had reached the center of the floor she was panting in a suppressed sort of way.

"Shall we try another whirl?" inquired the Chicago man, eagerly.

Not now, she smiled. I'm so dawnced out.

Not by a long shot,' said the Westerner with emphasis. 'You're far from being danced down. In fact, you're put together better than any little girl I've seen yet in London.

I am very sorry that this has happened believe me, he protested weakly.

And to think—I trusted you, she sobbed wildly.

I repeat that I deeply regret it," he reiterated, "but you must see that until I get some money, Mrs. Mulligan I can't pay this laundry bill or any other."

And softly whistling 'Everybody's Doin' It,' he closed door and returned to the game."

OUR ENGLISH COUSIN GOES FISHING

(Copyright, 1912, by American Journal Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.)

"SINGULAR name of one Yankee I've met since I came," observed Lord Ratsnazy, as we approached Pumfilers, and we further Dragoons to say nothing of the First Imperial Lancers. Not a bit of it, was we angle for salmon and the other both that one catches in the good Northwest. Strike me pink when I was invited by Professor Hortig and a few of other enthusiast to help-per-, supposed that there would be a bit of real sport attached to the proceedings, so I went and laid in a supply of salmon flies."

"You are a great kidder, aren't you?" I asked. "You were going fishing and thought you were going to have a bit of real sport? Ha ha! Don't you see? Real sport—reel sport!

But, my dear fellows, said Lord Ratsnazy, when I said that I didn't have the slightest notion in the world of perpetrating a beastly pun. Nothing of the sort, old chap. All the humor I get out of life I get out of Punch, old fellow, really. But as I was saying, I went out on this beastly fishing trip in perfect good faith. The salmon flies I bought were the most brilliant bait conceivable—regular invitations to dinner. I should call them. The rod I had with me was a rapping good rod—presented to me by General Stanley Ketchel of the old Ketchel family Devonshire. Four pieces of the finest split bamboo you ever laid your eyes on, if I could put it that way. Rather a foolish remark at that. Fancy a man having his eyes on a bamboo.

When we started out I hadn't the faintest idea in the world that we were going fishing in the blooming ocean. I supposed that Professor Hortig would take me out to a trout pond on one of his estates or something of that sort. Nothing of the kind. The trip began on a boat, continued on a boat and ended on a boat. And all the time we were having an the blooming ocean, you know. And we were fishing on a pole boat too old chap. Fancy an Esterbrook leaning on a boat with a lot of beastly sinks and cries with a cheers on them that went into the water with a sound like a man overboard, and all that. I tried to do a bit of casting at first but the bounders all around me made the most ridiculous remarks about my fishing that especially about my salmon flies. Several of the beggars objected to me taking a fling when I was casting. One of them said 'Saw Jack. If you throw that hook so near to my cat again I will crawl down your throat!' Most idiotic that remark. Fancy a beggar big—than two of me crawling down my throat. A regular Yankee thread that.

"I kept casting and all the time from all the surrounding boats sort of indifferent fishers. Not a blooming strike, or anything remotely resembling a strike. And all around me I saw a lot of Yankee boatmen pulling up a lot of bally flukes and flounds and all that sort of real fish. Skinny little beggars most of them, lighter than the sinkers on the line. Fancy the feelings of a flounder on a fluke when it's mopped on to a line weighted with a pound or so of lead, and dragged out of the water into the hands of a Yankee. Quite interesting, I should [illegible]

"Then you didn't catch a single fish with your salmon flies and your fancy rod?" I asked.

"I didn't," said the morose lord, "and I jolly well don't intend to try again."

Married Life the 18th Week

Copyright, 1912, by American Journal Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved

NOTE—In the stories you read of "Married Life in the Nineteenth Year," "Why I Left My Home," and all that sort of things you never hear of the poor husband. Perhaps he is too busy to write; perhaps nobody cares about him, anyway. Here for the first time we have a husband giving his views of married life in the way so many women have been doing of late.

By ROBERT SHERBERT TURNER.

AS readers of my autobiography will, may, should or don't remember, last week's installment told of my arrival at Candbean House, which is situated in the justly celebrated Catskills.

Personally I never could dope out the popularity of mountains as a place in which to spend the Summer. A mountain is an extremely inconvenient thing at best. If you want to go up it you have a tough climb, and if you want to go down it you are likely to fall over a cliff and crack your cocoa. With the exception that it is a good place to accommodate caves, a mountain is utterly useless. But, for some unknown reason, people almost always head for "the mountains" when they get a vacation People rave about the "grandeur" of such and such a mountain. All I can say is that if a mountain possesses grandeur then a pile of dirt in a field should have a little bit of grandeur, for it is, in a way, a small mountain.

To return to the Candbean House, however

As I have remarked, the place is in the romantic Catskills, and I expected to have a jolly time on long walks in the country.

The first day I went for a walk I noticed that a man dressed in overalls and chewing a long straw was following me. When I had walked a mile or two, with the farmer still trailing me, I began to grow uneasy

As we passed a little store where there was a telephone I observed my trailer go inside. Four miles farther down the road I was met by three men. One of them was wearing the costume of a canned goods drummer another wore the clothes of a county assessor, and the th.. was evidently a bobo, as I judged from his attire

After looking some moments at a photograph he held in his hand the drummer gazed intently at me and remarked, "It's him!"

Instantly the other two drew revolvers and ordered me to surrender.

"Are you crazy?" I asked, and indeed I believed that they were.

"Cut out the comedy stuff, Mike the Bite," said one of the men, gruffly. "We got you and got you right."

"What are you talking about?" I demanded

"Oh, you don't know we're talking about New York—oh, no! You don't know we're cops—oh, no! You don't know you're Mike the Bite—of course not! You don't know who we are and you don't know who you are! Quit yer kiddin, Mike, and come along!"

Of my handcuffed progress to the hotel I shall not speak. Of Lucy's horrified gaze I shall say nothing. Of the astonishment and incredulity of the cops when I was properly identified I shall say nothing. 'Snuff that I was reluctantly released

At dinner that evening we had a waiter with very heavy shoes. He forgot all our orders and he upset a plate of soup over Lucy's newest Summer togs. When I remonstrated with him he looked wise and whispered into my ear. "'Sall right, Luke. I ain't a regular waiter. I'm a New York detective out on the trail of Mike the Bite'"

I didn't know how waiting in the dining room of the Candbean Hotel was going to help him any in the chase, but then he was a professional and I wasn't even an amateur.

Later I was strolling by the stables when I saw a man in nice new overalls bring out a pail and a stool and sit down on the starboard quarter of a sea-going cow, evidently with the intention of milking her. The cow kicked out and knocked the man over in the mud, spoiling his nice new suit of overalls. He picked up the stool and pail and was returning to the kitchen, when I asked him if he wasn't going to finish the job.

"Nix," he replied, in pure Broadway English "Not on your life! I'm a detective, I am, and no bug-banged dairy maid Back to the White Lights for mine'"

When I found the bellboys were all detectives I thought it time to move. Not that I am a criminal in hiding, but with so many detectives detecting you can never tell what they may detect.

"PERCY AND HAROLD"—

As Played by Ward & Vokes At the Friars' Frolic

Copyright, 1912, by American Journal Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

PERCY—This is the last time I shall ever take Lady Belmont to a ball. Here I've been in the barroom only five minutes and she's out there dancing with that hateful Harold Wetherabee. And as they started the grand march, papah, papah laughed right out in front of the rest of the guests. I was so mad I could have taken his watch and chain right there. And I did.

(Loud cheers without.) Horrors! He's kissing her right in the—reception room. Ha! I'll settle his coffee for him. (Writes.) Sir Harold Wetherabee: You must fight me a duel. I will await you at the old trysting place to-morrow morning at 6:98. Should I win, you are sure to lose. (Rings.) John, throw this into the fire.

JOHN—Yes, m'lord. (Tears up note.

PERCY—That'll put a stop to his hateful antics. (Wetherabee is wheeled in on a truck.) Why, Harold Wetherabee, you darling child. Now, sir, at last we are face to face.

HAROLD—Yes, Percy Peregrin, I have you tooth for tooth. But tell me, why, why did you leave the banquet hall?

PERCY—Why, the idea, Harold; your table manners were simply atrocious. You have degraded me for time immemorial. The very idea of you dipping your bread in the gravy! Don't you know that's very bad form?

HAROLD—I know, but it's good taste.

PERCY—No, Harold; I see that I'll have to give you resounding instructions in table manners before we attend that little affair of the Duke's coming out party. Now, if you are asked if you will have a second slice of meat, don't say, "No, thank you; I have hinges enough on my trunk." And when the host is carving the turkey and several of the guests bid for the legs, don't you make a dive for one, too.

HAROLD—Why?

PERCY—Well, he is likely to tell you that he is not carving a centipede. And I say, Harold, when you bring your pet Pomeranian bloodhound to the table always make him lie quietly in your lap.

HAROLD—Oh, now; that's pretty steep

PERCY—I know, but otherwise he would be sure to walk around on the table and break some of the dishes. And when you are through gnawing the bones, please don't put them on your neighbor's plate.

HAROLD—Pray, what shall I do with them?

PERCY—Eat them yourself; they are very fattening. And, Harold, when the finger bowl is placed before you, I beg of you not to drink thereof.

HAROLD—What then?

PERCY—Simply wash your face and hands in it and pass it on to the lady on your right. But, stay; where are you going?

HAROLD—To the library to read up on the subject.

PERCY—Oh, come now; I will gladly be your library. Won't you stay and take dinner with me?

HAROLD—Well, since your invitation is so appetizing——

PERCY—John, have dinner for twelve——

JOHN—For twelve, m'lord?

PERCY—Yes, Mr. Wethersbee is going to dine with me. And, John, what became of the steak that we didn't eat at breakfast this morning?

JOHN—I gave it to the dogs, m'lord, but they wouldn't eat it.

PERCY—Bring it up and give it to Mr. Wethersbee.

HAROLD—Ha-hum. (If you'll excuse me for a moment, I think I have just enough money to go and get a hair cut

PERCY—Here, my dear Harold, take this dollar. Go and get them all cut

HAROLD—But I can't get a first-class haircut for a dollar

PERCY—Well, you haven't first-class hair.

JOHN—Pardon, m'lord, but there's a man outside with a wooden leg by the name of Smith.

PERCY—Go back and ask him the name of his other leg

JOHN—M'lord, he says he wants ten cents for a bed.

PERCY—Bring the bed up and if it's good enough I may give him a quarter for it. Oh, by the way, Harold, I've been planting grass in the garden lately. We're going to raise windows this Summer. I SAY, we're going to raise windows this Summer.

HAROLD—Yes, the blinds opened the first time you said it

PERCY—I'm so sorry you weren't with us last evening, Harold. We had such a delightful time without you, though. The only thing I missed was the pale ale.

HAROLD—Why couldn't you get any pale ale?

PERCY—Well, we didn't have any pail. And I didn't want to make the poor waiter go out in the rain after one.

HAROLD—Still, last night was a good night to get soaked.

PERCY—Several little incidents of our party remind me of one or two more etiquettical instructions I must give you, Harold. Now if you have more food on your plate than you can eat, don't say to your host, "Wrap this up for me so I can take it home." However, if milady happens to get a chicken bone stuck in her throat, such remarks as "I hope you choke" are passe. Ah, but my dear Harold, we did have a lovely time last night. Did you ever kiss a lady under the mistletoe?

HAROLD—No, I never touch the feet.

TRAMP (entering)—Gentlemen, you see before you a wreck, a derelict who is but a mere shadow of his former self. It seems only yesterday that I was surrounded by perfect health and happiness, and with enough money to stand up and tell any man what he could do. But now all is changed; I've lost every penny and am tottering on the awful precipice of suicide. My poor father died in Chicago, and the way I feel now I don't care how soon I join him. I hate to ask assistance, but——

PERCY—Poor fellow, let's pay his way to Chicago

HAROLD—Ah, yes; it's terrible, terrible. Let us give of what little we have, lest we may be reduced to such a plight ourselves some sad day. My good man how much is the fare to Chicago?

TRAMP—Twenty dollars, sir

PERCY—Here you are, my boy, and here's enough to get a little something to eat on the way

TRAMP—Oh, thank you, thank you, my benefactors. I shall never forget your munificence. Good-by!

PERCY—Good-by, and good luck. By the way, my good man, when did your poor father die?

TRAMP (making quick exit)—Fifteen years ago

PERCY—Tell me, Harold, were you refused at the morgue? I notice you're coughing better lately. Where are you going?

HAROLD—Good night! I'm off to Piccadilly

PERCY—Pick me one, will you?

HAROLD—Ladies and gentlemen, with your very kind attention we shall present for your approval a series of examples portraying the marvels of second sight, or mental telepathy, an exhibition which has become world famous as the wonder of the twentieth century Beware of imitations. My partner, who will answer with miraculous accuracy the questions put to him, cannot speak a word of English. Can you?

PERCY—No, sir.

HAROLD—My partner will now turn his back upon me and the audience. Now; I have here a lemon. What color is it?

PERCY—Yellow

HAROLD—Ha-ha! Marvelous! Before proceeding any further I would be pleased to have any lady or gentleman step up and examine the stage. Again (blows horn), what have I now in my hand?

PERCY—A horn

HAROLD—Correct! What kind of a tin horn is it?

PERCY—Made of tin!

HAROLD—Right! Will you kindly pass this horn through the audience, that every one may be satisfied that there is no deception? Next (rings bell), what am I now manipulating?

PERCY—A bell!

HAROLD—Certainly. What kind of a brass bell is it?

PERCY—Made of brass!

HAROLD—Now, here is a whiskbroom. How many straws are therein contained?

PERCY—Nine hundred and ninety-nine thousand, six hundred and fifty-eight.

HAROLD—Absolutely correct. Any one in the audience doubting the word of my colleague will kindly come forward and count said straws.

Wanted His Money Back.

THE conductor of the open-air concert was a temperamental German. Violently he beat time, leaning far over, now toward one instrument, now toward another, stamping his foot in his paroxysms of musical fervor and seeming about to spring from his box and carry the excitement of his own soul to one or another of the perspiring musicians.

Mike followed his every move with fascinated eyes until the close of the selection, then with a disappointed air he stated to ..

Both the hundred-yard and the fifty-yard range were tried but the recruit somehow failed to connect with the target each time.

SAVE $45,000,000 NOW LOST IN EGGS

Agricultural Department Calls Upon Consumer and Producer to Co-operate.

LOSS SURPRISINGLY HEAVY

Large Part Due to Lack of Proper Feeding and Clean Eggs and Candling Urged.

It is a conservative estimate that more than $45,000,000 is lost in the egg product[illegible] ... eggs, dirty, stale, heated [illegible] and rotten eggs. Think of the waste this sum means, from the time the mother hen loses from her business of egg laying in order to hatch and bring up the chicks that lay these wasted eggs, to the money that the housewife pays for the bad egg that can not be used. It is a loss to you, to the farmer, to every one in the egg business, and to the consumer.

In an open letter to buyers and shippers of eggs approved by Secretary Wilson of the Department of Agriculture, Dr M E Pennington says:

When farmers, peddlers, merchants, etc., come to you with eggs for sale, talk to them about the improvement of the product, and enlist their cooperation in the elimination of this great loss. Here are some of the fundamental points to be considered by all egg men, whether producers, shippers or distributors:

Eggs That Weigh 2 Ounces are Needed.

Encourage the production of large eggs. This can be accomplished by keeping pure bred "general purpose" breeds of fowls, hatching only the eggs that weigh at least two ounces apiece and from only the most vigorous stock. A bigger price for large than for small eggs will help along encouragement.

Infertile eggs do not hatch do not form blood rings and seldom form black rots. If the male birds are sold or penned up after June 1 the flock of hens will lay more eggs and they will be infertile.

A year-round observation of New York egg receipts showed that over 12 per cent were daily stored and shipped at a lower price on that account. You should buy these dirty eggs at a low price for you are not [illegible] If you [illegible] provided for such are [illegible] cool, dark place, kept clean and vermin free, dirty eggs will be reduced to a minimum.

More than ten per cent of the eggs received in New York during the year are "seconds" because they are stale. Tell your customers that candling eggs every afternoon, or twice daily, in hot or muggy weather [illegible] keeps them cool, clean, dry place until marketed, and marketing them at least once a week, and more frequently in the Summer time, will reduce the number of stale eggs greatly. Clean eggs are worth less money than fresh eggs, and along the line [illegible] sensitive your trade that eggs from stolen nests and from [illegible] are never fit for sale. If the farmer thinks they are good, sell [illegible] him to eat them at once. For, since the egg buyer can afford to pay more for large, clean, fresh whole-shelled eggs, it is good business for the farmer to use small, dirty, cracked eggs at home.

Candle Eggs If You Would Win.

Do you know how to candle eggs? If not, learn, and learn quickly! There is no other way by which you can determine the worth of what you are buying, for having yourself learned how to grade eggs, show the merchants, peddlers and farmers in your neighborhood, by means of the candle, what kind of eggs they are [illegible] to you. Farmers are not running new egg buyers angels. Show the farmer the kinds of eggs you cannot pay for and he will find a way to eliminate the bad egg and to make the good egg even better.

When first quality eggs come to your packing house, what needs do you take to keep them so until they get to market? To build up and keep a good reputation for your output you must grade carefully and uniformly; pack in good fillers, firm and clean; and ship only in well-iced cool conditions. If you would be classed among up-to-date shippers you must have machine cool refrigeration that the chilling of the egg may begin the moment it leaves the nest. Candle in a room where the temperature does not go above 55 degrees Fahrenheit. Ship chilled, in a good refrigerator car, in car lots. If you can not chill the eggs before shipping, use a refrigerator car, well iced, and ship only the minimum load, that is the most you can be sure of that the ice before the market is reached.

CREAMERY BUTTER.

The Normal Composition of the Product.

The production of creamery butter has reached vast commercial proportions and different standards are in force in the various States for the regulation of its quality and chemical composition.

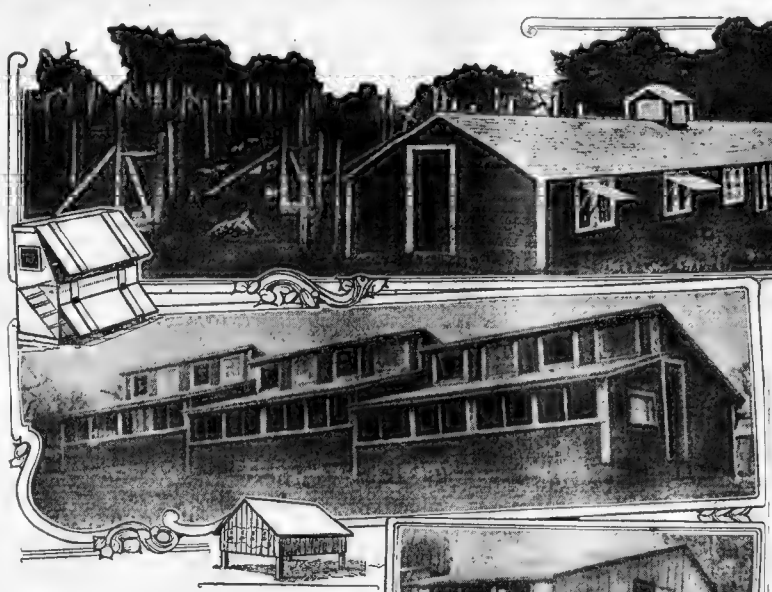
Reports of thousands of analyses for water and other constituents have appeared in various publications, but data showing the composition of normal, American creamery butter and the conditions under which such butter is made are not plentiful.

A new department bulletin (Bureau of Animal Industry, No. 149), issued after a comprehensive study of the subject, is to show in a variety of ways the results of the chemical analysis of American creamery butter collected during one year throughout the principal dairy districts of the United States, and to present at the same time a record of the conditions under which the butter is made. The area covered in this investigation embraces fourteen States. The pamphlet can be secured by applying to the Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

FRESH AIR HOUSES INCREASING PROFITS OF POULTRYMEN

Driving Away Disease and Increasing the Farmer's Egg Yield

HERE ARE THREE OF THE LATEST IDEAS IN POULTRY HOUSE CONSTRUCTION FOR THE NEW ENGLAND STATES.



At the top is a long house with windows which are open except during severe storms. The buildings in the next picture were designed by Dr Wood of Silver Lake, Mass., the front being open at all times. No curtain is used. The bottom picture illustrates the plan of Joseph Tolman of Rockland, Mass. Wire is the only covering in the front. A house made from a piano box and a Summer house for chicks are also shown.

Dr Wood and Joseph Tolman, Bay State Authorities, Tell of Need of Open Fronts

PREJUDICE against open air poultry houses is being destroyed [illegible] facts in northern [illegible] surprisingly large number of flocks are still housed in quarters that [illegible] egg laying capacity and impair their health.

Poultry, as has been proved by extensive experiments, are benefited by open houses in Maine and Ontario, and it would seem that there is no risk to be incurred in Massachusetts.

The growth of the demand and the number of earnest men engaged in it have helped to bring about the improvement in housing conditions.

The earliest types of poultry houses were of tight, double-walled construction, and very little attention was paid to ventilation. Warmth and protection from the weather were the main factors considered. The houses were elaborate and expensive on account of the double-walled construction, alleyways, floors, complicated ventilating devices and various interior arrangements which experience has proved to be impractical.

Such buildings became quite damp during the first few months and it did not take really progressive poultrymen very long to realize that damp houses meant cold houses and that they invited disease. There was no reliable or definite information on the amount of floor and air space required in the fowl, and the poultryman was compelled to house a new trail through an untrodden forest of difficulties.

No Danger in an Overdose of Air.

Fresh air has a hardening effect upon the fowls and an overdose has never been known to cause serious trouble. The writer at one time owned a male bird which had an extremely bad case of roup. At the suggestion of a friend, who was interested in the treatment of the disease, the bird was put in a breed coop which had neither bottom nor front. A small yard was made around the coop and at no time was the bird allowed outside of this enclosure. The weather was extremely cold during the experiment, but did not appear to affect the bird, for he improved steadily and in a few weeks was entirely rid of the disease. Similar cases have been successfully cured by this extreme treatment and it clearly demonstrates the curative effect of fresh air.

Anyone who has had practical experience with the open-front or fresh air house will admit that roup and colds are conspicuous only by their absence. This is due to the fact that dampness and impure air are unknown in the open-front house. The litter, instead of being soft and damp, cracks and snaps when you walk over it. Those are conditions which tend to promote health and vigor. The beneficial effects of fresh air treatment have been very forcibly demonstrated by several of the experiment stations.

Next to a liberal supply of fresh air and sunshine, the cost of the house is the most important factor. It is more economical to use good material and build with a view to permanency than to construct the building at the cheapest material and have to be constantly repairing. With careful planning an investment of one dollar per hen will provide a house which is both practical and durable. The essential requirements of a poultry house are an abundance of fresh air and sunshine, a dry floor and ample, practical, interior fixtures. It is possible to embody these factors in a house without making it elaborate and also have a building which is neat and attractive.

Calls for Fresh Air.

By DR. P. T. WOOD.

During the past few years evidence has been rapidly piling up in favor of the fresh-air treatment of diseases, not only of poultry and domestic animals, but of human beings as well. It is a well known fact that today in many diseases of the respitory organs of human beings the sufferers derive the greatest and positive benefit, whether the disease be acute or chronic, from carefully conducted fresh-air treatment.

Some of those who have been interested in this method of treatment of disease have, during the past several years, given considerable time to the application of fresh-air treatment for the prevention and cure of diseases of the respiratory organs of poultry.

Fresh Air Houses Are An Old Idea.

No claim can be made that the idea is a new one or particularly original, for fresh air types of houses and fresh-air methods of poultry keeping have been advocated from time to time for many years, but it is only of comparatively recent date that the movement has received any considerable amount of attention from the general public. Until quite recently, popular opinion has favored close, tight poultry buildings built with the idea of making them warm and snug, either with or without artificial heat. It had been very generally believed that hens will not lay well in a cool house, and that warmth is absolutely essential to getting eggs in Winter.

The fact that some of these so-called warm, close houses, when not supplied with artificial heat, are too warm by day when the sun shines and extremely cold at night, with dampness prevailing and a raw chill in the air, has in large measure been overlooked. The dampness and house sweating is largely a matter of an insufficient supply of fresh air or poor ventilation, and is chiefly the result of the condensation of the moisture exhaled by the fowls.

Keep Cold in and Keep Out the Heat.

Few poultrymen who favor tight, double-walled buildings stop to consider that house insulation that will keep cold out will also serve to keep cold in and keep out heat. The double-walled poultry house with dead air space is built on principles very similar to those employed in the construction of refrigerators and cool storage rooms.

Everyone knows that an unheated house no matter how tightly built always has, in the Winter season, a deadly cold chill in the air of its interior, unless the building is regularly and frequently given a thorough airing. This is quickly demonstrated at any time in the Winter by opening the door for a few minutes while open and found it was blowing almost a gale and snowing hard.

Snow Doesn't Affect the Yield of Eggs.

In the morning the snow was over a foot deep and drifted badly. It had also grown quite cold. When I arrive at my houses to water and feed my fowls, I [illegible] the entire floor of the house was covered with snow and opposite the windows it lay in drifts two and three feet deep. There was also quite a little snow on the dropping boards.

I wondered what effect this would have upon the egg yield, but found when the eggs were gathered that I had more than any previous day, and from that time they increased right along. I did not have a single bird take cold or experience any other setback from this extreme exposure.

Fowls housed in open front houses show practically no check on egg yield, no matter how severe the Winter changes of weather may be. There are a great many different kinds in regard to what a fresh-air house is. Some claim if they use a certain front house, their birds are under ideal fresh air conditions. I do not agree with them. In visiting poultry plants where certain fronts are used I notice a great difference in the color of the beads of the fowls and those on my own plant. Mine are a much darker red, which denotes the health and vigor that we need so much.

Remember that the fowls spend a very large portion of their time on the roost. They need fresh air when resting just as much and even more than at other times.

No Danger from Cold.

By JOSEPH TOLMAN.

The need of fresh air for poultry is, I believe, the most important question before the poultry industry today. The first eight years of my work with poultry was with the closed type of house, and I met with very poor results. It was no uncommon thing for me to take batch after batch out of my incubators, place them in the brooders and, in less than three weeks, carry them out in pails and bags, losing practically the whole lot, for those that lived would be very poor specimens.

Perhaps these poor results cannot be wholly attributed to the manner of housing, yet, from results I have obtained since using my open-front, fresh-air houses, I am convinced that most of the trouble was due to close housing my breeding stock. I believe a great many other poultrymen at the present time are getting the same poor results that I did.

Vigor and Health Are Necessary.

Why put off this important question longer? Decide that it is vigor and health that we need most in our flocks and from now on use the open front, fresh-air house and I am sure you will see, as I did, a wonderful change for the better. The closed type of poultry houses were very expensive ones for me, for I could not make a success of the business until changed to the open-front house.

I feel sure the closed type of house, such as the majority of poultrymen have used in the past, has been the chief cause of such diseases as roup, diphtheria, chicken pox, etc. It is a fact that these kinds of fowls have been so weakened through insufficient fresh air, particularly at night, that it has been almost impossible to raise their chicks.

I will tell you of an interesting experience which I had the first year I gave my brooders plenty of fresh air. I was then using some old table buildings 20 feet long, 10 feet deep, pitch roof, 6 feet standing, with two windows in the south side. During a heavy snowstorm, if the wind blew, the floor would be entirely covered with snow and a large drift in front unless one of the windows was closed.

It was during the first severe snowstorm of the year, about the last of December. At night when I left my houses the weather was calm, but cloudy. I did not expect a change so left the front windows wide open as usual. About midnight I awoke

EDITOR'S ACRE

By PROF. R. W. NEAL

FIGURES about the increase in the price of farm products just issued by the director of the census are worth thought by farmers. They are significant of the improved condition of farming as an industry and money-getter. Similar figures are not at hand for other great industries, but it is doubtful if the same facts will be found true in any of these. The figures concern the rise in prices as received by farmers from 1899 to 1909, the year of greatest corn production.

The total value of farms' crops in the year named was roughly five and one-half billion dollars, an increase of two and one half billion or 83 per cent. By far the larger proportion of this increase is the result of higher prices for farm products on delivery from the farm.

The total value of farm crops in the ten-year period increased less than 10 per cent. Moreover, the actual increase in quantity produced was nothing extraordinary. The quantity production of cereals increased less than 2 per cent, but the farm value of the cereal crop increased nearly 80 per cent. Hay and forage production increased 23 per cent, but the crop value increased 70 per cent.

The total value of cotton production increased less than 12 per cent, but the value of the cotton actually produced increased more than 117 per cent.

Put it another way, remembering in connection with the figures that follow that not all farm crops are reported according to acreage. The value of crops reported by acreage was nearly $5,000,000,000. At the prices prevailing ten years earlier, the same crops would have been valued at less than $2,000,000,000. By percentage, the increase in nearly 67 instead of 10, as it would have been at the prices of 1899. Prices have further increased since 1909. The difference of nearly $2,000,000,000 in value between 1909 and 1900 represents the rise in prices.

Were such an increase shown in other industries vitally involving the sustenance and welfare of the country, they would be heralded with alarm.

FARM INVESTIGATION.

THAT agriculture affects every department of life is a commonplace remark. But how intimately the investigation of agricultural problems is associated with the various aspects of existence we nevertheless overlook or fail to appreciate. To think of the study of an agricultural problem as throwing light upon medicine would not occur to us. Yet Bulletin No. 255 of the Bureau of Plant Industry, on the structure and development of the disease known as crown gall in plants, may be of more significance in human than it is in plant pathology. The character and nature of cancer—the unconquerable and terrible affliction which has always baffled medical science—will be far better understood as a result of the investigation of crown gall, which is described as a plant cancer. The non-medical man cannot presume to judge the final importance of such results, but he cannot doubt that they are important, and that medicine and the world is thus indebted to agriculture.

FARM HOUSEWIVES AND THE GROCERY

Freshness, Full Measure, Reliable Goods and Non-Substitution Should Be Demanded.

While the farmer is trying to grasp the new agriculture his wife should not fall behind the times. She should, above all, be a good buyer of provisions. This is the day of the scientific articles, the "just as good" matters at equal prices. The unscrupulous merchant also has his innings in spite of laws that threaten prosecution.

There are certain things in buying groceries that the housewife should demand.

First, freshness of any article whatever.

Second, exact weight.

Third, goods from a reliable firm.

Fourth, the article and brand asked for, not a substitute.

The freshness of the goods will depend upon the amount of business your dealer does—and his own word of honor.

Full weight is the buyer's right. Don't be afraid to weigh purchases on the butcher's scales. A good set of scales may be quickly paid for by deductions made for short weight.

The buyer will have to depend somewhat upon the dealer to supply goods from reliable firms. Most grocers are willing to put in good brands demanded by their trade.

Buyers ought to, insist on getting what they ask for. Oftentimes one may be good—but if you ask for lard, get lard; if you wish cottolene, insist on cottolene. If the dealer finds he can palm off different articles on you he will soon get the habit of delivering inferior goods and you will be the loser.

The mail order grocery store in the big city, with credit and orders made up of many items, is strongly tempted to put in inferior goods.

Premiums cost money. If a housewife buys a brand of cereal food to get a china saucer, the price is paid for when the food is eaten. When dishes are needed, buy them, in the outright. Farmers who are keeping cows are begun to make butter on the farm.

Many small creameries have failed due to poor management of the operation or cutting in the enterprise. In numerous communities prevailing among the farmers that they had been cheated in the butter fat test, and could get more out of their cream and milk by making it into butter on the farm.

RURAL MAILBAG

BLACK-ROT OF GRAPE.

Rural Mail Bag:

My grapes have suffered for several years from a disease that I am told is black-rot. I originally planted grapes with the idea of planting more and raising grapes commercially, but since the vines began to bear I have been discouraged by the disease. My neighbors say there is no cure for it and do not grow any vines. What can be done? R. K. L.

Consult the experiment station of your State and the extension department of the college for directions about general culture. The Cornell University Experiment Station, Ithaca, N. Y., has made a special study of black-rot and you can probably procure a copy of their bulletins on the subject.

RHODE ISLAND CORN CONTEST.

Rural Mail Bag:

Please publish the rules governing the corn-growing contests in the Rhode Island State contest. I am seventeen years old and have raised some corn this year that looks very good if it goes on that way.

R. C.

The regulations are too long to print in the AMERICAN. If you write to the State Board of Agriculture at Providence or to the Extension Department of the State College at Kingston, you can get a premium list and full directions. You are doing right to take part in these contests. It is the boys and young men who LEARN how to farm that will be the successful agriculturists and helpful farm citizens ten years from now.

Society Plans Weddings of Autumn

ROMANCE is thriving largely in social life. Cupid is surely making his while the sun shines and the list of weddings scheduled for Autumn as a result of this onslaught by the little love god is a long and growing one.

Mr. and Mrs. Harris Winfred Jacobs of Hanworth road have announced the engagement of their daughter, Helene Marie, to Charles N. W. Goodwin, son of Captain and Mrs. Herbert W. Goodwin of Walk Hill street Mattapan.

Announcement has been made by Dr. and Mrs. Justo del Risco of Brooklyn, N. Y., to H. Clayton Beaman, Jr., of Boston.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward S. Grant and son, Edwin J. Grant, of Somerville are at Green Harbor where they will remain until after Labor Day.

Among the important weddings of the Autumn will be that of Katherine Saltonstall, whose engagement was recently announced to Philip R. Weld. The engagement was somewhat of a surprise even to the intimates of the two young people, as Mr. Weld thought Boston main makes his headquarters in New York and the two had met for the first time at a house party.

The Saltonstall Girls.

Miss Saltonstall is the eldest of the three daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Philip L. Saltonstall of Intervale, Hyde Park, whose summer home is at West Chop. She was presented three seasons ago at a ball given in her honor at Paul Revere Hall. Her sister, Rose Saltonstall, was a bud the following year, and last Winter Miss Frances Saltonstall was presented.

All three are exceedingly pretty girls and all took part in the Vincent Club show last Spring. The youngest, Miss Frances, took the part of a barmaid and Miss Rose that of an old family nurse. They all dress alike and resemble one another closely.

Mr. Weld is [illegible] General Stephen M. Weld of Dedham and Wareham, who spends part of each Winter at Longueville House, Boyle, Ireland. He was graduated from Harvard in [illegible] was also a member of the Somerset Club and of the Harvard in New York. His brother, Rudolph Weld, married Miss Nancy Parker of New York.

Miss Rose Dexter [illegible] Paris is enjoying a trip through Chateau country. When at home she resides with her brother George Dexter of Beacon street. She sailed for Europe in June and shortly after her arrival was presented at the court at Buckingham court by Mrs. Whitelaw Reid.

Her sister, Miss [illegible] spent last Summer at Newport, has gone to Castine, Me., where they have taken a cottage.

Debutantes of Summer

Debutantes for the coming season are already signed on the [illegible] and are enjoying the [illegible] pool in many cases as a substitute for the shore resorts. Among other buds will be Miss Alexandra Lawrence, daughter of Bishop and Mrs. Lawrence; Miss Mary Hemenway, Miss Nora Saltonstall and Miss Miriam Sears.

Among the important weddings of the coming month will be that of Miss Marie Deaton and Patrick Grant, whose engagement was announced in the early Spring. Judge and Mrs. Grant sailed for Europe several weeks ago to visit Mr. and Mrs. Robert Grant, Jr., are due back early in September.

Notable Autumn Wedding

Among the prominent weddings of the Autumn to which society is looking forward with much pleasurable anticipation will be that of Miss Mary Townsend of Philadelphia, who is then to wed Herbert Jacques, Jr., of Boston Harvard '11.

Miss Townsend is quite well known in Boston society, as she was born with her sister for Harvard Class Day and the Country Club races.

Miss Ruth Flint is to be another Autumn bride, for her wedding to William S. Seamans, Jr., of New York [illegible] October.

Mrs. Preston Gibson (at the left) and Miss Lotta Robinson

AUTOMOBILING at Newport is one of the most interesting pastimes of the fashionable colony gathered there for the Summer the first thing in the morning the early risers and a spin along the boulevard, long past the Casino and later to the swimming pool constitutes the average morning trip, while a spin way into the country in the afternoon an automobile riding by moonlight are the later day's diversions.

Mrs. Preston Gibson [illegible] of the most prominent women in the colony. Newport [illegible] and for a season in succession has been a host and hostess to many friends. Miss Lotta Robinson is another with motor mania and has recently been the guest of Mrs. Gibson at her handsome Newport villa.

Miss Crocker at Cohasset.

Miss Sarah Crocker of Commonwealth avenue, who has been making an extensive automobile tour through New Hampshire and Maine, has returned to her pretty estate in Cohasset where she will remain throughout the season.

Mrs. John Chapman Gray of Beacon street, who has been spending the season in Dublin, N. H., will occupy her Summer cottage at the Lawrence cottages for the remainder of the Summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Alden Thorndike and their family of Commonwealth avenue are shortly sailing from Liverpool for home. Upon their arrival they will go immediately to "Highwood," their Summer home in the Berkshires.

Mr. and Mrs. Francis Stanton Blake, who since their arrival from France have been the guests of Mrs. Arthur Amory Eliot, Mrs. W. Scott Fitz, Mrs. Marshall Fabyan, Mrs. Ezra [illegible], Mrs. Fannie M. Faulkner, Mrs. A. P. Gardner, Mrs. John Hays Hammond, Mrs. Franklin Haven, Mrs. Charles P. Hemenway, Mrs. Lester [illegible], Mrs. James McMillan, Mrs. [illegible] Treat Paine, Mrs. Dudley M. [illegible], Mrs. Robert Treat Paine, Mrs. Miss Elizabeth W. Perkins, Mrs. Henry E. Russell, Mrs. Russell Tyson, Mrs. Harrison Tweed and Mrs. Washington B. Thomas.

Mr. and Mrs. Frederic L. Cobb have issued cards for the marriage of their daughter, Katherine, to Noble Foss, son of Governor and Mrs. Eugene N. Foss, to be solemnized on Tuesday evening, September 3, at 8:30 o'clock in the First Congregational Church, Newbury, Vt.

Mrs. Hunt Slater, who is spending the Summer at Bar Harbor, has issued invitations for a reception to be given at her beautiful home there on August 22 in honor of the Russian Ambassador and Mme. Bakhmeteff.

Mrs. Samuel C. Lawrence and Dan iel W. Lawrence of Medford were among the recent arrivals at Poland Springs, Me.

Crowninshield Lectures.

Stockbridge society is much interested in the series of illustrated lectures on art which Frederick W. Crowninshield has arranged to give in the Town Hall there. The first in the series will be given August 23 by Augustus Lukeman, his subject being Modern American Sculpture.

Miss Margaret Stackpole of Beacon street is at present the house guest in Newport of Mrs. Charles H. Bayley and her granddaughter, Miss Edyth Deacon.

Miss Alison Haughton is the guest of her brother and sister in law, Mr. and Mrs. Percy Haughton, at their Summer home on Castle road, Newport.

Myron W. Whitney, the well-known baritone; Miss Virginia Hickney, violoncellist and Miss Edith Currie, pianist, will be the artists.

The patronesses for the affair include Mrs. Gordon Abbott, Mrs. Robert Shaw Brewster, Mrs. S. Parker Brooks, Mrs. W. [illegible], Mrs. [illegible] converse, Mrs. [illegible], Mrs. William H. D. [illegible], Mrs. Amory Eliot, Mrs. W. Scott Fitz, Mrs. Marshall Fabyan, Mrs. Ezra [illegible], Mrs. Miss Fannie M. Faulkner, Mrs. A. P. Gardner, Mrs. John Hays Hammond, Mrs. Franklin Haven, Mrs. Charles P. Hemenway, Mrs. Lester [illegible], Mrs. James McMillan, Mrs. [illegible] Treat Paine, Mrs. Dudley M. [illegible], Mrs. Robert Treat Paine, Mrs. Miss Elizabeth W. Perkins, Mrs. Henry E. Russell, Mrs. Russell Tyson, Mrs. Harrison Tweed and Mrs. Washington B. Thomas.

MANY FETES AT SHORE AS SOCIETY PLANS TO GO MOUNTAIN-WARD

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

THE season at the seashore is slowly but surely nearing its close, and even now the great army of restless pleasure-seekers are turning their faces mountain ward.

The beach season, however, is making its close a triumphant one, and carries in the keynote for the greatest number of the many festivities planned.

But while society sits waiting patiently the last call to the hill-country, at Newport, the North Shores and Bar Harbor the season is [illegible] a veritable whirl of society pastimes, horse shows, and this last gasp of gaiety is a most thrilling one.

On the North Shore the past week tennis was the most absorbing pastime, and on account of the Magnolia tennis tournament interest in tennis on the North Shore is now at its height.

But regardless of all other excitement, that of entertaining and being entertained keeps the general social [illegible] alive.

Miss Amory at Beverly.

Miss Susan Amory of Boston is the guest of her sister Mrs. Gordon Dexter at Beverly Farms. Miss Amory is among the best known girls in the North Shore [illegible] she figured prominently [illegible] the smart affairs while she [illegible] Summers [illegible] both of the month and during the late [illegible] early Autumn will be at [illegible] Cottage on Cobb [illegible].

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, 2nd, who have their handsome villa at Manchester-by-the-Sea during the early [illegible] for the Carnegie [illegible] Lake, N. Y., where they [illegible] the remainder of the season.

One of the most interesting of the many [illegible] on hell at the [illegible] the one at Manchester-by-the-Sea on Wednesday, August 14, at Virginia Beach, at 2:30.

One of the most delightful events of the North Shore season will be the entertainment at Hawthorne Inn Casino in aid of the Fishermen's Institute of Gloucester on the evening of August 21. Among the well known society patronesses are Mrs. W. A. Taft, Mrs. John Hays Hammond, Mrs. John Greenough, Mrs. J. S. Fassett, Mrs. John Clay, Mrs. J. Murray Kay, Mrs. A. W. Pollard, Mrs. S. A. Raymond and Mrs. Winthrop Sergeant, all of Gloucester.

Miss Hetty June Dunaway who made such a success in her readings before society in Boston last Winter, will present her charming little sketch, "The Winsome Widow," adapted from "The Lady of the Decoration." Miss Mabel Vane and Miss Mary Shackford are to be the piano accompanists.

Lawrences at Nahant.

Mr. and Mrs. John Lawrence and their family are among the recent arrivals at Nahant, where they will [illegible] remainder of the season. [illegible] been for the early Summer at North Haven, Me., at which [illegible] the Mey and Mrs. Endi[illegible] family of Groton and their [illegible].

Mrs. Wm. Dexter, who has been abroad since early Summer and who has just returned to America, instead of going to her beautiful Summer [illegible] Marion has joined her daughter Mrs. Stanley McCormick, at their villa [illegible]. She has leased for the season in Newport. At the close of the Newport season they will go to their cottage at Marion.

Mrs. Garland Clapp of Beacon street, who has been spending the early [illegible] Cotuit, is now spending some time with her sisters, the Misses Emily and Mary Sohier, at the Brownlands, Manchester.

Mr. and Mrs. John L. Saltonstall, who have been here for the early Summer at [illegible] Brookline, are in Beverly, here [illegible] London, where they intended [illegible] who [illegible] going to [illegible] Grafton, Cushing, Boston [illegible] also has a son gone to Scotland from London.

Going to Germany.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Steinert and their three sons who have been in London for some time have gone on to Paris on their way to Germany and Switzerland in their touring car. They will return to London the last of the month.

John Tudor Gardner of Brookline and Miss Eleanor Gardner were among the passengers on board the Saxonia [illegible] arrived in Naples the past week.

Mrs. J. Montgomery Sears and her daughter, Miss Helen Sears, and William Lindsey and his son, Kenneth Lindsey and Mr. and Mrs. Amos D. Hathaway of Brookline are among those [illegible] arriving from abroad. Mrs. Arthur Doane Cook have just returned to their estate at Magnolia from Cedarhurst, L. I., where they were guests at a large house party.

The musicale in aid of the Frances E. Willard settlement which was to have been given at the home of Mrs. H. Parker Bremer at Manchester has been postponed to the last of the month when [illegible] given at the home of Mrs. Alexander Peabody Loring, Jr., at Pride's Crossing. Mrs. Bremer Mrs. Russell Tyson and Mrs. Stanley P. Clemens are in charge of the entertainment.

Mrs. Cecil Biggins of London is in Newport to visit her sisters, Mrs. F. Lester Jones of 4th Cryders of North Easton, and Mr. William Woodward (Elsie Cryder) at the Chateau in Newport. Mrs. Biggins, who was Ethel Cryder, was the last of the beautiful Cryder triplets to wed.

Baroness Hengelmuller, her daughter and Miss Watt at Bar Harbor

AMONG the many notables at Bar Harbor this season are the Baroness Hengelmuller and her interesting young family. The Baroness who is a decidedly popular and charming matron is quite often seen in the morning being driven about through the town by her pretty little daughter, the daughter's friend, Miss Watt, occupying the jumble seat in the rear.

They drive one of the prettiest ponies at the Harbor and show to advantage their excellent [illegible] ship.

Honeymoon on the Coast.

Mr. and Mrs. George Wendell Phillips, who were married late in June, are remaining through the season in San Francisco, where of late years Mr. Phillips has made his home. Mr. Phillips is the son of Mrs. John C. Phillips and a brother of Mrs. Andrew Peters and of Dr. John C. Phillips.

Mrs. Andrew Robeson Mac Iver, daughter, Miss Harriet Robeson, are planning to spend another Winter abroad. They have leased their home in Walnut street, Brookline, to Mrs. Stephen Dexter Bennett and are planning to sail in the late Summer. At present Miss Robeson is the guest of her aunt, Mrs. Charles S. Sargent at her Summer home in Woods Hole.

J. W. Brooks Ladd of Marlboro street has been spending several weeks with his fiancee, Miss Alice Boutell, daughter of the American minister to Switzerland, and Mrs. Boutell at the American consulate in Switzerland. It is said that the marriage of Miss Boutell and Mr. Ladd is to take place in Washington during [illegible] when Mr. Ladd is a son of Mr. and Mrs. S. Babson Ladd of Marlboro street.

CARSON'S MOB REIGN AROUSING BRITAIN

Government's Aim May Be Forced by Incendiary Appeals of Tory Leaders.

BIG INDUSTRY MAY MOVE

By C. O'CONNELL GALVIN

Two weeks ago attention was drawn in this column to the fact that three of the Tory leaders across the water—Bonar Law, F. E. Smith and Sir Edward Carson—were making appeals to their Orange supporters in Belfast so openly treasonable in tone and character that the government, from sheer self respect, would be compelled to take official action.

Those Tory peers and commoners dallied with the cold determination to bring about civil war in Ireland if Belfast, the capital of Ulster, was to be forced to submit to the will of the majority of the people of Ireland. Their appeals were directed to the passions of the Orange mob and to the fanaticism of its members and the conviction has been forced that government action must come sooner or later as a result of the language of these leaders of factionism and bloodshed.

The one thing that has held the hand of the government was fear of a disinclination to make a real martyrs of Sir Knight Carson and his political associates. But the state of things in Belfast as produced by those men has grown so quite beyond the boundaries of public peace and decency, that no alternative other than determined action lies before the government.

Ministry Will Act.

Cable messages show that the ministry is about to move in the assertion of its own authority. But it is a question whether armed and mostly State trials with their hot-headed heroes can meet the situation.

The violence with which the "Orange" mobs are letting their home rule fellow-citizens know that they, as well as Catholic—can be judged to some extent by the fact that the directors of the Harland & Wolff shipyards, among the largest in Europe, have been driven to open a notice in their works intimating to the rioting element that rough-and-ready methods in the yard will not be tolerated and that the shipbuilding firm will not stand out of Belfast to some more tranquil locality.

If this notice is carried out it will employ some 10,000 men, and as all Protestant employees it is not divided politically. Some are voting Irish Party, the president, and Sir Alexander Craig, the managing director, are strong believers in home rule and are among its most generous supporters; others are opposed to the home rule bill.

But however they differ in party all are men of broad views and of humane character and as decent citizens they view with disgust and shame the riots and cowardly assaults of the past few weeks.

Notice on Gates.

The notice posted upon the Harland & Wolff gates reads:

"Whereas our firm are placed in a crisis in Belfast shipyards owing to the disturbances the impossibility of carrying on work properly has been growing daily more obvious. In view of the brutal assaults on individual workmen and the intimidation of others several departments in Harland & Wolff's have already been closed down. In their utter ignorance that their own interests are affected by their folly, extremists have gone so far as to molest and intimidate the specially skilled men responsible for the working of the power plant. These men, assaulted and intimidated, are gradually leaving off work, and as they cannot be replaced the firm are reluctantly compelled to shut down a considerable portion of the plant, which will affect a still larger number of their work, and thus gradually the whole establishment will automatically come to a standstill.

A fund has been started for the benefit of the families of the men who are thrown out of work by this reign of terror in Belfast. In acknowledging the gift to the Lord Mayor of Dublin, wrote to the committee:

"The citizens of Dublin, without distinction of class or creed, have always been noted for their common sense tolerance, and it is difficult for them to appreciate the occurrences now taking place in Belfast. The position is discreditable in the extreme to all who are in any way connected with the violence and outrage now so rampant, and particularly to those who, by their public pronouncements, made these possible."

Joseph Devlin, M. P., himself a Belfast man and a member of Parliament for the city, writes to the treasurer enclosing a check for the fund:

"It may be safely asserted that there is no precedent in any civilized land in modern times for the deliberate attempt by the majority of the people of a country to drive a minority from their homes and employment, under the sacrifice of liberty and equality of interests, and I am strongly moved to express the detestation of such a system in the strongest possible terms."

The World's Sympathy.

"You will have the sympathy of the world with you in your appeal for help for the victims of this organized infamy, and I feel sure that the response to it will be a generous and prompt one. Its actual response will be to our minds to some extent a test of the sympathy of the world with the terror shall go hungry or houseless, and that everything possible shall be done to mitigate their sufferings and to protect them against further outrage. These people are the wounded soldiers of the Home Rule struggle, and their case will appeal with peculiar strength to the people of Ireland, in whose cause they have made to suffer and who themselves have a record for toleration unparalleled in the history of nations."

All over Great Britain public opinion is voicing its abhorrence of the barbarous conduct of Bonar Law and Carson.

These two men especially, with Lord Londonderry and the Duke of Abercorn thrown in as make-weights, are rapidly making a romp from the reaping of whose harvest they may not be allowed to escape.

In the words of First Lord Churchill they are "preaching doctrines by which any useless or disruptive movement can be justified, and from which every street row with a brickbat and every crazy fanatic fumbling with a pistol may derive inspiration."

Practical Plan for Raising Charity Fund

Getting Rid of House Waste Helps to Relieve Tired Mothers and Children.

Central Council of the St. Vincent de Paul Society of Boston has begun a practical movement for raising funds for sick children and tired mothers.

Every morning one gets some cards from the residence of Dr. John A. Horgan, No. [illegible] Hancock and makes calls during the day in response to postcards at the society's headquarters, No. [illegible] Hanover street, Boston.

The truck collects all sorts of saleable waste, old newspapers, magazines, old rubbers, discarded household goods.

These are sold and the proceeds devoted to a fund for sick and needy women and children.

The idea has already met with public support, but to ensure further success the society appeals for the co-operation of all.

Send a postcard to the St. Vincent de Paul Society, No. 42 Hanover street, Boston, and rid of useless waste in your home and give a lift to the efforts of those who are directing a worthy movement.

DOMINICAN CONVENT SUCCESS FIRST YEAR

Sacred Heart Institute, established by Community Sisters from Kentucky a year ago, is located on an ideal site in Watertown. The young women pupils are taught not only music, languages and deportment, but domestic science. The aim of the institution is to properly train the mind, the heart and the body.

Groups of junior pupils, at play and study, at the new Catholic Academy established by the Dominican sisters at Watertown. Photographs by American.

A year ago a community of religious Sisters whose head convent is in Louisville, Ky. acquired a fine property on one of the hillside sections of Watertown and, with the approbation of Cardinal O'Connell established there an academy for girls under the title of the Sacred Heart Institute.

The property purchased for the academy was known as the Bates farm. It consists of some fifteen acres splendidly equipped with forest trees, lawns and beautiful driveways, all uniting to make the place most inviting for student life.

Although the academy is still in its infancy, its progress in a single year has been so solid and so sustained that the sisters who have come here to guide its activities are filled with high hopes for the future.

The Dominican sisters have behind them, as an order, traditions of seven centuries of great achievement as teachers, pioneers of moral reform and builders of the noblest forms of feminine culture. The aim of the Sacred Heart Institute is to develop useful, noble and lovable women.

For Mind, Heart and Body.

The intellectual growth is carefully nurtured and stimulated while it is safeguarded by sound morality. And with the high intellectual and moral training goes along day by day delightful physical culture, so that mind, heart and body are trained to graceful harmony.

The great corner-stone of the training is that the pupils are taught to do right from a sense of virtue and honor rather than from fear of punishment. Only those restrictions are imposed which are essential to the formation of habits of order and to the attainment of that self-control which will enable young women to be true to their convictions later in life, when there are no longer bound by school or convent discipline.

Catholic pupils are required to conform to what the religious discipline of the house deems requisite in regard to nobility of character and other virtues. Pupils who are not Catholics, for the sake of uniformity, attend divine service in the convent chapel, but no undue influence is exercised on their religious principles.

The academy provides thorough courses in primary, intermediate preparatory, commercial and academic grades. Training is given besides a thorough training in music, art and elocution.

For Ladylike Deportment.

Once each week all the students have the advantage of a lecture on social culture.

The requirement of refined manners, pleasing moderation of voice, use of correct English on all occasions, correct deportment at home and abroad, on the street, in traveling and at table are discussed.

Students who do not plan to those requirements, who totally fail in doing so are denied the honors of graduation, no matter what be the degree of excellent scholarship attained. All pupils are under the constant supervision of sisters who correct faults against politeness and Christian deportment.

Connected with the institute are the following religious sodalities: Sodality of the Immaculate Conception, Sodality of St. Thomas of Aquin, Sodality of the Infant Jesus, Holy League of the Sacred Heart, the St. Cecilia Musical Literary Club and the Rosary Club.

All the pupils of the academic and preparatory grades are members of reading circles whose aim is the formation of a taste for good reading. These circles hold weekly meetings. Seven times during the year each circle entertains the faculty and pupils by reading biographies of writers and making criticisms of their works.

SUNDAY AMERICAN'S SPECIAL CABLE LETTERS FROM THE CAPITALS OF EUROPE

SERMON DRIVES LISTER-KAYES TO SOCIAL OBLIVION

Canon Henson Denounces Sir John as Accomplice in Peruvian Rubber Atrocities.

THUNDER FROM THE ABBEY

Former Miss Yznaga, Long a Leader in London, Suffers With Her Husband.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—London society and the Putumayo atrocities in the rubber country might be supposed to be so far apart as any two extremes in the universe, but the publicity given the latter has brought to the former the understanding of certain conditions which have been puzzling for a long time. This condition is the semi-retirement from social leadership of Sir John and Lady Lister-Kaye.

Ordinary publicity of these outrages might not have stirred society very deeply, but when, last Sunday, Sir John was verbally gibbeted by Canon Henson in a sermon preached in Westminster Abbey and that report was duly chronicled, society did take notice, for in this country thunderings from the pulpit do not often occur, and it is said that never before in modern times has the pulpit of England's Valhalla been put to such use.

Canon Henson did not mince matters in his indictment, but mentioned Sir John by name as the head of the rubber company which allowed these horrigages to occur.

Lady Lister-Kaye is an American, being a sister of the late Duchess of Manchester, and before marriage was Natica Yznaga del Vale, of Ravenswood, Louisiana. She has been known for years as one of the most popular Anglo-American hostesses.

It was rumored that Sir John, who was groom-in-waiting to the late King Edward, was unlikely to be considered for re-appointment to that post by King George, and gossips had it that it was on account of the well-known dislike of the royal family to Americans at court. The rumor gained credence after the recent retirement of Lord Spencer as Lord Chamberlain, when several peers with American wives were passed over for Lord Sandhurst's appointment. It is now believed that the King has been fully advised for some time of the Putumayo affair. Also that Sir John Lister-Kaye was in full knowledge of the events concerning which he pleaded inability to adjust, and that the King frowned therefore upon any close connection of the Baronet with the royal household.

Sir John Reported Ill.

Since Canon Henson's sermon Sir John has been reported ill at his residence in Manchester square, and he has made no statement. Through the season it has been noticed that the former extensive entertainments of Lady Lister-Kaye have been curtailed recently and that omissions not mentioned in the social columns.

A portion of Canon Henson's sermon in which he refers directly to the Baronet's connection, reads:

"Behind the adventurers who are immediate perpetrators of this outrage on the native races stand the great financial syndicates of Europe and America, wealthy companies and individuals who gain the double advantage of moral anarchy in the rubber forest and legal security in the civilized communities which provide their markets and revere their wealth.

"Read the pompous prospectus of the Peruvian Amazon Company. Consider the situation of the directors. They include three Englishmen, whose names, not otherwise illustrious, have obtained world-wide celebrity—Sir John Lister-Kaye, Baronet; Henry M. Read and John Russell Gubbins. What were they paid for if not to give the assurance to the public, especially to the shareholders, that the company did an honorable business, earning honest profits? How did these gentlemen deserve the confidence they inspired? Were they eager to find out the truth and separate themselves from such abominable proceedings? Far from it!

"Should Arrest Employers."

"I desire chiefly to church—the shrine of English-speaking Christendom—to express what is in the minds of thousands of persons in England and America—that the time has come for swift changes in commercial law as shall render it impossible for those who make money by the oppression of the native races to wash their hands of the responsibility of the crimes of their agents.

"The employers, with whose guilty—even if unknowing—connivance their crimes were committed, who shared the blood-stained gains they transmitted, are here among us. It is not the irreducible demand of justice that these men should be arrested and brought to public trial?"

KING AT MANOEUVRES.

George VII. to Play Conspicuous Part at Cambridge, Sept. 17.

By HERBERT TEMPLE.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—Although King George is undoubtedly one of the poorest horsemen in the country and the sight of him on horseback cannot be said to inspiring one to his soldiers, he has decided to take quite a conspicuous part in the great army manoeuvres which are to take place in the eastern part of England the third week of September.

Travelling by special train from Balmoral, the King will arrive in Cambridge in the morning of Sept. 17.

Nearly 80,000 will be engaged in the manoeuvres, including a large force of territorial cyclists and the army wing of the Royal Flying Corps.

NEW CANAL PROJECT.

Plan to Connect Riga With the Black Sea.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—In consequence of the recent closing of the Dardanelles, and the ruinous losses incurred by many South Russian shippers, the scheme for the construction of a canal between Riga and Kherson, in order to connect the Baltic with the Black Sea, has been revived. Several syndicates have, it is understood, offered to carry out the project in the event of a concession being granted by the Russian government.

FASHIONS OF THE PERSIANS CAPTIVATE PARISIANS

Fetes which won a remarkable success in capital of the French, being supported by notable society personages, lead to belief that styles of the East will become a fad this Autumn. Festival, bristling with titled names, considered the most beautiful ever held in the French metropolis.

Alfonso Runs Away From Mother-in-Law

King Does Not Like Princess Henry of Battenberg's Efforts to Make Him a Good Boy.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—King Alfonso has abruptly left Osborne Cottage on the Isle of Wight, where he has been staying with his wife and mother-in-day, Princess Henry of Battenberg. The reason for the King's sudden departure, it is whispered, was his inability to remain under the same roof in peace and guilty with his mother-in-law.

Princess Henry does not approve of certain traits of Alfonso's character and does not hesitate to express her opinion in the dictatorial manner she acquired from long association with Queen Victoria in the latter's old age. Alfonso has always resisted her reproaches and attempts to make him a better boy. This is not the first time there has been friction between the pair, the King having previously taken refuge aboard his yacht with congenial company.

WAIT STRENUOUS PRINCESS.

Katherine Radziwill to Pay Paris a Visit.

PARIS, Aug. 17.—Princess Katherine Radziwill is coming to Paris very soon, but, as usual, to replenish her luxurious wardrobe, but to stay for some time, probably until she gets into new trouble with the police. She has just had a lively skirmish with the minions of the law at Odessa and was forced to leave that city in hot haste and as a stowaway on a steamer bound for an Italian port.

She probably thought nobody knew her hiding place, but as a matter of fact the police were well aware of her presence on board, but left her in peace, as her flight was the easiest way to get rid of a very cunning and troublesome personage. It is her intention, I understand, to devote all her time here to work on her new book, which will reveal the contents of the documents she stole from Lord Milner's dressing table and which will cause a sensation compared to which Ex-Crown Princess Louise's moments were nothing whatever.

PARIS, Aug. 17.—The tremendous social and artistic success of the Persian fetes is accompanied by the prophecy that Persian styles will be the fad this Fall. The close-fitting toque, with its aigrette ornament, is singularly like the Persian turban, especially if the ornament is worn on the right side instead of the left.

But fashion-makers hint that Persian effects will be even more prevalent in the coming season. Women whose figures take kindly to soft silks and flowing draperies are to be congratulated.

The Persian fetes, like those given by the Countess Aynard de Chabrillan in her house on Rue de Christophe Colombe, are esteemed the most beautiful fetes ever seen in Paris by many society personages who have attended fetes, durbars, coronations and other elaborate functions all over Europe and Asia.

The Grand Duchess Vladimir of Russia says:

"I have been present at two coronations in the Kremlin and at the most beautiful fetes of St. Petersburg and have never seen anything comparable to the Persian fetes in Paris."

The fete of the Countesse de Chabrillan was entitled "The Thousand and One Nights." Those who took part in the acting are all of highest Parisian society. The programs bristled with titled names. The beautiful women were organized into groups, each representing a story which was short, charming and supremely artistic.

The great success of the fetes and the extreme beauty of the scenes gave a lively impetus to Persian fashions here. The result is due to be seen in an increased adaptation of Persian goods, styles and effects in the coming season, according to those who are considered prophets of style.

Late Mikado Thought Russia His Best Friend

ST. PETERSBURGH, Aug. 17.—On his way back to Japan, Prince Katsura gave out an interesting statement regarding his brief stay in Russia to a Russian newspaper. He brought with him an autographed political letter from the Mikado to the Czar, but, as he knew when he reached St. Petersburg that the Mikado was dying, he never delivered the letter, nor did he see the Czar. He gave its chief contents verbally to Kokovtseff and Sazonoff.

It appears that the Mikado said he was convinced from the shaping of events in China that it was best for Russia and Japan to act in closest union for a long time to come. This was so much the case that Prince Katsura informally offered that Japan should declare common cause with the European group to which Russia belongs. His proposals have been handed this week to the French Premier, M. Poincare, and it is now on the cards that the armed forces of Japan may be put wholly into the scales on the Anglo-France-Russian side.

Bauer and 40 Disciples Drive Town Piano-Mad

PARIS, Aug. 17.—Thanks to Harold Bauer, whose American tours have been so frequent, piano-mania has broken out in acute form at Vevey, Switzerland.

Bauer hired a house there called Villa Bonport de la Tour de Peilz. Immediately forty pianists from all parts of Europe flocked there. They play night and day so that the whole town and countryside echoes to the piano-mad. It is a place of perpetual music and natives and visitors have to come under the spell that those of them who are not in ecstacies are under the influence of musical quietism.

Sometimes the whole forty assemble in mad devotion of the master at Bauer's villa, which is near the residence of the famous painter, Gustav Gourbet. A serious Banerite states that the disciples of Adelard never followed him more enthusiastically into solitude.

Bauer has scored another triumph in that the London Philharmonic Society has awarded him a gold medal. Paderewski and Bauer are the only living pianists who have received this distinction.

Another thing which has contributed to the music madness of Vevey has been the presence of thirty-seven bands on the closing day of the national festival of music. The whole thirty-seven joined forces and played under one conductor.

Lily Elsie, Pet of the English Stage, Dying

Beautiful Actress, Recently Married to Wealthy Man, Has Only Few Months to Live.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—Her many American friends and admirers will be sorry to learn bad news of the popular musical comedy favorite, Lily Elsie.

Since her marriage to Ian Bullough, a wealthy Scottish landowner practically nothing has been seen of the fair lily. Indeed, malicious scandal-mongers whispered she had left her husband and gone abroad. This is untrue, but unhappily there is a far more serious cause for her seclusion. Mrs. Bullough has fallen a victim to the same malignant malady which, after a brief married life of unrelieved suffering, carried off Bullough's former bride, Maud Darrell, also a musical comedy actress of note. It was announced that Lily would return to the stage at the conclusion of the run of "Gipsy Love" at Daly's Theatre, but there is now little hope that this plan will be realised. One eminent specialist only gives the famous beauty, who recently underwent an operation, a few months of life.

ENGLISH COTTON FIELD.

Plan Outlay of $2,500,000 on Uganda and British E. Africa.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—England is going to spend $2,500,000 on the development of Uganda and British East Africa next year and this outlay is apt to prove a very good investment, which will tend to make this country independent of America's cotton supply. Uganda is an ideal country for the raising of cotton, labor is cheap and the quality of the product almost as good as that of Egypt. Lancashire wants all the cheap cotton she can get and Uganda can grow cotton she can't that Lancashire wants.

Suffragette Hid From the Police in a Royal Palace

Christabel Pankhurst Dodged Warrant in Friend's Home at Hampton Court; Dead Law Protected Her.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—It has just leaked out that Christabel Pankhurst, the elusive suffragette leader, who has been lost to the public since a warrant was issued for her arrest, perpetrated some delightful jokes on the public, one of them worthy of such a notable strategist.

Miss Pankhurst is now enjoying herself at Dieppe, where she is out of jurisdiction of the English courts, but before she escaped to France she was for some time safely ensconced in a royal palace, where she was immune from arrest. This was Hampton Court palace, built by Cardinal Wolseley. Although the palace is King George's property, it is never used now as a royal residence, but is divided into suites of apartments which are granted by the King to persons of noble birth, mostly ladies of limited means. With one of these, who is an ardent suffragist, Miss Pankhurst took shelter when the warrant was issued. The police eventually traced her, but were powerless, for although the old feudal law making anyone in a royal palace immune from arrest has been abolished, no one is ever arrested under such conditions except on a charge of the greatest gravity. Christabel lay low in the palace until the storm blew over and then quietly escaped to France.

Mrs. Barton French Is Now a Stage Manager

Superintends Rehearsals of Play by F. A. McNutt, Which Has Premiere Next Month.

PARIS, August 17.—The musical and historical talent of Mrs. Seth Barton French of Paris, friend of J. Pierpont Morgan, and widow of his late partner and, prior to her marriage, Miss Walker Fearn, has been requisitioned by F. A. McNutt to superintend the rehearsals of an American play he has just finished.

McNutt was formerly American charge d'affaires at Madrid, secretary of the Embassy at Constantinople and chamberlain to His Holiness Pepo Leo XIII. In those days he lived in the famous Pamphilidoria Palace in Rome. He is the author of several books, but is now devoting his time exclusively to drama.

The play which Mrs. Barton French is superintending is to be performed at Innsbruck next month. The McNutts are at their country place in Tyrol, and there Mrs. Barton French is marshalling the players for the opening at Innsbruck.

There is a song in the play which Mrs. French, an excellent amateur vocalist, sings. It is not stated, however, that she will appear in it on the opening night, although she is entirely competent and an excuse for her doing so is likely to be made owing to the breakdown of the professional.

Paris Society Fond of Mrs. Henry Siegel

Noted Women of Title Are Among Those Who Aid in Receiving at Her Functions.

PARIS, Aug. 17.—The newest addition to the society salons of Paris is Mrs. Henry Siegel of New York. Her social progress is being watched with much interest, especially by women from the ranks of trade, as they do not acquiesce in the unwritten law of leaving social functions to the titled and untitled aristocracy and to the ranks of diplomacy. Mrs. Siegel's name generally appears in the Paris society papers as Mrs. Vaughan Siegel. Vaughan having been her maiden name. One of her daughters is married to a titled Italian and the other is being wooed by several aspirants to her hand.

Among those who help Mrs. Siegel to receive are the Duchess de Talleyrand, Marthon Barrider de Rions, daughter of the late Judge Fuller of New York, and the Marquise de Talleyrand-Perigord, nee Curtis, of New York. It is quite the thing in Paris for ladies to drop their husbands' first names and tack on their own family name. Hence we get Mrs. Taylor Harbison, Mrs. Hunt Slater, Mrs. Denman Jarves and Mrs. Stuyvesant Rutherford. Mrs. Curran, formerly Elsie Postley, follows another system and signs herself "Mrs. Curran, nee Postley," so as to distinguish herself from her sister-in-law, formerly Miss Cook of San Francisco, now Mrs. Rose Ambler Curran.

Duke of Westminster Coming After Polo Cup

Gathering Best Players in All England and Is Willing to Spend $500,000.

LONDON, Aug. 17.—The Duke of Westminster has now a dozen of the best polo players in England engaged in daily practice at his private grounds at Eton Hall with a view to forming a team to go to America next year to try to win back the cup. The Duke has an absolute obsession to bring the cup back to England, and has told his friends he is willing to spend $500,000 to do so. He has bought up every available good pony in England without consideration of price, offered the hospitality of Eton Hall to the leading English polidtes, and told them they can bring as many of their friends there as possible, so long as they practice vigorously.

COUNTESS TELLS IN BOOK HOW HER LOVE LED TO CRIME

Annie Vivanti, Poetess, to Publish Memoirs of Countess Tarnowska.

AUTHOR SERVING 8 YEARS

By CAMILLO CIANFARRA.

Special Cable to Sunday American.

ROME, Aug. 17.—Annie Vivanti, the English-Italian poetess and novelist, is about to publish the manuscript of the memoirs of Countess Maria Tarnowska, written, by the latter during her eight years in Trani Penitentiary for complicity in the murder of Count Kamerowski of the Russian student Naimow, in Venice in 1909. Several attempts have been made to interest the minister of justice and King Victor in an application for a pardon, but the countess is now resigned to serve out the sentence, and employs the wearisome hours on her book, telling the life story of a beautiful woman, climaxing in a novice love that obscured all other sentiments and leads to complicity in the crime at Venice.

Miss Vivanti first met the Countess in Milan prison, where the latter had been removed because of too much liberty in the Venice jail. It was disclosed that the beautiful prisoner received flowers and dainties as well as Russian cigarettes, from admirers. The Countess had feigned illness so as to be placed in the jail infirmary, and also simulated religious fervor to interest Cardinal Cavallari, Patriarch of Venice, through the intermediary of the jail chaplain.

"History of a Noble Soul."

The poetess encouraged the Countess to write her memoirs and promised cooperation in the English translation. Today, Miss Vivanti said: "The book is now ready. It will be a history of a noble soul lost in a labyrinth of passion, and contains much that did not come to light at the trial. Every society woman will recognize herself at some stage of the heroine's life. The book is not altogether love, but is also the picture of a personage, towering high for his fine sentiments and the sanctity of his own life. This man is Count d'Rourke father of the Countess, who gave his consent for its publication after reading the manuscript. The Count is the only man who always stood by his daughter. Every three months he leaves his castle near Kiev, where he leads the life of a recluse, and travels five days all to see his daughter for two hours. He is eighty years old and has traveled twenty times to his daughter in jail.

"Another character in the book is Tanla, only son of the Countess by her first husband. The boy is eleven years old, a page at the Russian court and ignorant of his mother's terrible fate. He prays nightly before an empty frame that once held a picture of himself in his mother's lap. This picture is now in the possession of the Countess and is the only ornament in her cell. The world will know a different Countess Tarnowska when she is released from the penitentiary.

The facts reveal Italian penitentiaries as the places for literary work. The Countess is not the only prisoner who has published a book. Dr. Murri of Bologna University, serving a life sentence for the murder of his brother-in-law, Count Bonmartini, to allow his sister to marry Dr. Seccbi, has written a play, a novel and a tragedy in verse, after the Greek example. The play filled in Florence two years ago.

Varesina, lady of the Sicilian brigands, serving thirty years for a double murder, wrote a play favorably received at Catania. A long account was written from Abbatemago, who turned crown's evidence in the Camorra trial concerning the Cuocolo murders, with sketches of all the leading Camorrists in or out of jail.

Cesare Emilio Bonchetti, who was caught in Italy after absconding with several thousand dollars belonging to the Italian consul general, while serving five years, has written five novels and a drama. Another prisoner is Count Ercolani, ex-Crown Princess Louise's memoirs are nothing.

PLOTTING SAILORS SHOT.

Plan to Otpture Czar More Serious Than Made Public.

ODESSA, Aug. 17.—The revolutionary plot to capture the Czar and the imperial family on board the imperial yacht Standart proves to be more serious than at first reported. Sixteen sessions and a petty officer of the battleship Ioann Zwatoust were arrested at Sebastopol. Ten were sentenced to death and four shot.

The plot was more serious even than the mutiny on the Kniaz Potemkin in 1905. The officers planned bombing on the imperial family between Yalta and Sebastopol, and forcing the Emperor to abdicate or abrogate his autocratic powers in favor of a limited monarchy and a constitutional regime.

The yacht's seizure was planned as a signal to the mutinous Baltic squadron and Black Sea squadron, which murdered and attacked Kronstadt and St. Petersburg simultaneously. Martial law was issued recently, forbidding officers to discuss the political unrest in order to deaden curiosity with outsiders under pain of degradation.

GERMAN SHIPS CARELESS.

Danes Protest at Peril of Their Fishermen.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 17.—The German warship maneuvers in Danish waters are arousing much criticism because of the great harm to the fisheries, the frequent visits to the Fenners bill by the German vessels endangering the lives of the fishermen. Although they carry the required lights, the German warships are referred to as reckless concerning fishing interests.

The leading newspapers allude to the frequent visits as inconvenient and harmful because they are not near the best fishing places.

SEASON OPENS THIS WEEK AT THEATRES

Three Playhouses Lead the Way With Brilliant Offerings.

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

While the new season is bursting upon us in the midst of some of our hottest August weather, the local theatre managers console themselves with the thought that the city has been so long without extensive theatrical entertainment that not even unfriendly weather will keep people at home. There is something in that idea, too.

Going back over several seasons it will be found that early August attractions of substantial quality have always drawn good attendance, even in the most terrifying of weather. At certain seasons of the year the weather and the drama meet in deadly conflict, with all the advantage with the weather, but inasmuch as the public is generally keen for variety in its entertainment, and as the theatres have offered nothing in particular for months that would interest the $2 playgoer, there is every reason to believe that at least some of the early arrivals among the attractions will find ample reward for blooming in high temperature.

"Over Night" at Shubert.

Doubtless the opening of so many theatres at this early date was influenced by the success of "Over Night," which came to the Shubert several weeks ahead of schedule time last year and played to prosperous business. Mr. Brady had nothing to regret after eight weeks with "Over Night" in Boston. Encouraged by last season's record, he is sending the same play back to the Shubert tomorrow.

The most important of the new plays, however, is "The Million," which arrives at the Majestic tomorrow. Both Mr. Savage and the Shuberts are pinning fond hopes on this farce. Backed by a record of five months in New York last season, when it out-distanced every other farcical offering in the city, it is expected that the play will run well into the Autumn before its removal will be necessary.

Another fresh offering will be "A Night Out" at the Park which will serve May Robson as a starring vehicle. Miss Robson, as one of the authors of "A Night Out," may be expected to give herself a square deal, a quality which actors often say is lacking in authors. Miss Robson will frisk herself through the play as a high-spirited and entirely up-to-the-minute grandmother—a nice old lady who looks for a high time and finds it.

* * *

With the opening of the Gaiety Theatre last evening the burlesque season may be said to be in full swing. At the theatre Bob Manchester's "Cracker Jacks" is drawing popular attention. Both the Gaiety Theatre and the attractions that play there present good evidence of the improvement that has overtaken burlesque entertainment the last few years.

Few theatres in the country, whether in the popular-priced field or those serving $2 drama, equal the Gaiety as the home of theatrical entertainment or as an investment. Built upon ground where land values are high and with an equipment unexcelled by any theatre in the country, the Gaiety has brought safe returns to its owners each season.

Doubtless a part of this success may be attributed to the fact that the theatre itself is attractive and centrally located, but a great portion of the profitable returns must be credited to the sound character of the Eastern Wheel shows that visit the house. Burlesque as exhibited at the Gaiety is no longer an entertainment for men only, but for women as well. It is upon that fact that one may safely give credit for the success of Manager Bachelor's house.

* * *

John Craig has returned from his vacation, which he passed in an extended motorable tour of New England, and is now at his desk at the Castle Square Theatre, laying plans for his new season. Mr. Craig, having assured himself of at least six more years at the Castle Square, has no doubts about the future. When the new season opens Mr. Craig's company will be found to be one of the best of his last year's players as well as several additions that are expected to give strength to the organization. As in the past Mr. Craig will enliven his playing season by indulging in both musical comedy and straight drama. He has always found that the public likes variety and that his players keep in better tune when given a wider range of work.

* * *

To give the drama of 1912-13 a vigorous boost, Henry W. Savage threatens to come to Boston tomorrow to direct the launching of "The Million" at the Majestic.

You seldom find Mr. Savage very far away when any heavy pushing is needed, and while "The Million," judging from New York reports of last season, is doubtless amply able to take care of itself in the scramble for public favor, Mr. Savage will be here to share in the glory of the conquest.

Mr. Savage is becoming almost as much a globe trotter as he is a producer. Although he has just completed a "round-the-world tour that occupied five months of his time, he is planning for a hasty departure to London, immediately following the opening of "The Million," to be present at the first performance of "Everywoman," which he hopes will find the English theatregoer receptive to its charms.

Lindsay Morison stepped down and out at the Majestic Theatre last evening. The passing of Mr. Morison from the Summer drama was made a somewhat hilarious occasion by a house full of patrons, who regret that theatrical conditions compel Mr. Morison's retirement after several years of happy management. In order to send Mr. Morison away in a pleasant frame of mind and convince him that his friends are still with him, he was presented with a brace medallion of himself, made by Hugh Cairns, the Boston sculptor. In responding to the gift Mr. Morison promised to return with a better company, probably to his own theatre, if his plan for securing a permanent home for his players has satisfactory results.

PLAYERS BEHIND BOSTON FOOTLIGHTS

PARKS, THEATRES AND EXCURSIONS

Castle Square Theatre.

Ever since the closing of his season at the Castle Square, John Craig has not been idle. No sooner did the curtain fall on the final performance of the season than the house was immediately put into the hands of refurnishers and decorators, and the result will be a practically new playhouse. Always one of the most beautiful and commodious of theatres, the Castle Square has been undergoing during the past two months extensive alterations and repairs.

The fifth season of the Castle Square Theatre under the direction of Mr. Craig will begin Monday afternoon and evening, August 26, with performances of A. E. W. Mason's brilliant comedy, "Green Stockings," in which Margaret Anglin made a distinct hit two seasons ago.

Globe Theatre.

The Globe will offer the usual excellent bill of variety and motion picture plays for the week beginning tomorrow. Kelly and Galvin will return to vaudeville after an extended musical comedy engagement and will surely be among the favorites in the vaudeville section of the programme. The Rays, the Song Reviser and the Pathe Weekly will as usual contribute their share to the entertainment.

Waldron's Casino.

There will be merriment galore at Waldron's Casino this week. The return of Joe Hurtig's "Social Maids" has brightened the atmosphere around this house of extravaganza. Musically as well as in comedy, costuming and general beauty this show is substantial. There are seven comedians busily engaged in the exploitation of the comedy lines. The loudest of them all is George Stone. Time to join in the run for honors are Wilbur Dobbs, Jimmie Conroy and Bill Baker. Of no less importance are the feminine entertainers headed by Jennie Austin, and including Josie Rhoe, Etta Pillard and May Williams.

Orpheum Theatre.

Again the Orpheum Theatre will feature Keaney and Hollis, who are known as the original college boys. This will be the farewell performances of Keaney and Hollis for over a year, as they leave in fall on an extended Western engagement. Other entertainers will be Gaylord and Herron, in "On and Off;" Moore and Young, singing and dancing comedienne; Shaw and Lee, singers and dancers; and Cornella and Wilbur, comedy acrobats.

Hub Theatre.

The usual Sunday concert will be given at the Hub Theatre this evening. Select motion pictures and songs will make up the bill.

Grand Opera House.

The Grand Opera House is Boston's new burlesque theatre. The policy this year will be that of giving daily matinees and evening shows. The company selected for the opening will be "Queens of the Follies Bergere," in which Joe Sullivan, T. F. Thomas, Ed Jordan, Anita Julius, Irene Calkins, Pearl Turner, Porter and Clark and others. The special nights at the Grand Opera House this year will be Thursday, when wrestling matches will be given.

National Theatre.

Everything is in readiness for the reopening of the National Theatre for its second season of vaudeville. All of the big vaudeville features of America and Europe will be presented at this theatre during the season. The Colonel Bowling offices of America will provide the artists for the National Theatre.

Howard Theatre.

Coming to the Old Howard this week is the "Whirl of Mirth" company, headed by Eddie R. Collins. Mr. Collins is a second edition of Johnny Ray, in the house who will be seen Ergotti and his Lilliputians, and Jennings and Renfrew.

Bowdoin Square Theatre.

At the Bowdoin Square Theatre this week Mlle Moore, the girl who rivals Charmjien as a trapeze artist, will be seen in connection with the vaudeville portion of the bill.

Scenic Temple.

The program of the Scenic Temple this week will be high class vaudeville, photo plays and illustrated songs, with Leona Howe's Union orchestra providing a promenade concert.

Durbar in Kinemacolor.

Undreamed of Oriental glories startle Tremont Temple audiences who witness the natural color motion picture presentation "The Durbar in Kinemacolor," which has passed its third month of success in Boston. The princes of India vied with each other in displaying wealth and made the ceremonials of the crowning of King George and Queen Mary as Emperor and Empress of India the most gorgeous series of spectacles in the world's history.

Paragon Park.

At no time in the cabaret at Paragon Park has there been such a radical change in the list of talent as for the coming week. A notable capture has been the four English Rosebuds, which will head the list the coming week. They come direct from Hammerstein's Music Hall in New York city and were brought to this country as a special feature of Velasis Surati's "The Red Rose" last season. Another attractive feature will be Doris Claremont, in her serpentine dances.

Provincetown Trips.

For a day's outing on the water, full of pleasure, sightseeing and healthfulness, the steamship Dorothy Bradford offers an exceptional opportunity in its 100-mile sail to Provincetown and return. Promenade decks, airy staterooms, spacious saloons and every convenience is provided for the comfort and safety of the passengers.

Bass Point.

On every trip the General Lincoln and the Martha's Vineyard have been taxed to their utmost capacity during the past week when the days were particularly warm. There is no better way of keeping cool than to take the delightful sail on either of those steamers to Bass Point. The scope of outdoor amusement will find plenty to amuse him at Bass Point. There are numerous attractions, including the vaudeville and motion picture theatres, shore railway, boating, bathing and games of all sorts.

Norumbega Park.

That Mother Out seems to have an endless imagination and one that is continually conjuring up new combinations of fun and music and hosts of complicated situations for edification of patrons of Summer resorts is an acknowledged fact, and in his latest and best effort he has struck a new note and produced a musical comedy built upon entirely different lines than its predecessors. It is "The Lass and the Laddie," a Scotch musical surprise that will appear in the open air theatre at Norumbega Park for one week, beginning tomorrow afternoon.

Providence Trolleys.

People who are planning to go to New York will find a trip with an enjoyable element of variety offered through the operation of the special through trolley car service from Post Office square, Boston, to Providence. The car reaches Providence in time to connect with the night boats for New York.

The Convict Ship.

The old British convict ship, "Success," is becoming one of the well-known sights of Boston as it lies in its wharf at Charles River stores, Warren Bridge. Owing to popular demand the admission charge has now been reduced to twenty-five cents. The season in Boston will be limited.

ENTERTAINMENTS TO SUIT ALL DEMANDS

Theatres Promise Good Productions; Amusements at Parks; Trips on the Water.

Majestic Theatre.

"The Million," a farce in four acts, will be given its Boston premier at the Majestic Theatre tomorrow evening. It will be presented by practically the entire company that appeared for five months in New York. "The Million" is rated as one of the most amusing farces of recent years. It is said to keep its audiences laughing from the rise of the first curtain to the final moment of the last act, and it bears the added distinction of being one of the few plays taken from a Parisian source in which the theme is wholesomely and vigorously humorous without the slightest taint of sex problem or later-sexual complications.

In the cast are Taylor Holmes, Paul Kelly, Charles Trowbridge, Donald McDonald, Edwin Forsberg, Robert Lawrence, Charles McCarthy, Gustave Hartheim, Y. L. Driggs, William J. Mahoney, John Needham, Eulalie Jensen, Helen Luttrell, Kenyon Bishop and Maude McCarthy.

Park Theatre.

"A Night Out," which will be presented by May Robson at the Park Theatre tomorrow evening bears on par with hereditary influence upon character. Two young men, Jack and Paul, full of life and ambitious to see the world beyond the social barricade established by a puritanical mother, resolve to outwit her rigid supervision, but are discovered by their grandmother, a generous, broadminded old lady, who loves them devotedly, yet determined to investigate the places they visit and pass judgment. The boys take her to a famous cafe. "Grammy" has no idea of the character of the place until it is raided by the police. Upon this hint Henri Miles Robson and Mr. Daney have constructed a play. Miss Robson will be assisted by Paul Decker, Jack Storey, George Hall, Lewis Parmenter, John Rowe, Eddie Leaness, C. C. Gwynne, Fay Bunch, Lotta Blake, Edith Conrad, Louise Rand and Margaret Boland.

Shubert Theatre.

It is nothing more than fitting that the comedy, "Over Night," which opened the season at the Shubert Theatre a little over a year ago, and ran for two months, should return for a short stay of two weeks and open the season at the same house this year. That it is chosen to open the season at the Shubert tomorrow evening is sufficient evidence of its great success and popularity during the engagement last season. Many will want to laugh again over the amusing experiences of the strangely assorted bridal couples who make a honeymoon trip up the Hudson.

William A. Brady is sending his big production and in making up his cast has picked out the principals from all of his "Over Night" companies which toured the country last season. Miss Francis Larrimore will be seen as Miss Sterling, who has to make her honeymoon trip with the wrong husband, Miss Ada Sterling will appear as the suffragette Georgiana Keiths. Robert Kelly will repeat his work of last season as Percy Darling.

Gaiety Theatre.

Bob Manchester's "Cracker Jacks" is the show that has made itself popular by giving the public what it wants. It comes to the Gaiety this week with everything new except the title, with more comedians, more pretty girls than ever before, including Ruby Leoni, the model Venus of burlesque, and Beatrice Harlow, the lyric star. The comedians are Johnny Jess, James Coglan, Harrison Mack, Dan Riley and Barney Fagan. The opening burlesque is entitled "A Garden of Affinities," and brings forth pretty girls and pretty costumes. The olio is one of the strongest on the road.

B. F. Keith's Theatre.

Theatregoers of Boston and vicinity who have so often admired the artistic performances of Eleanor Gordon, will no doubt be delighted to learn that she will appear at B. F. Keith's during the coming week for the first week of a very limited vaudeville engagement. Miss Gordon, who has just returned from Europe, will open her second big season in "Kismet," by Edgar Selwyn. Gladding Gordon will appear in a remarkable playlet, "Light Housekeeping," which will be produced for the first time on any stage. Another big feature on the bill will be Mae's Burlesque Circus, a really wonderful hippodrome act. Ben Welch, Tom Gorman, otherwise known as "Half a Ton of Harmony," will present a lively singing act. The members of this act have an aggregate weight of close to 1,000 pounds. Felix Adler, the funny man from Cook county, will be another feature, while the three Emmersons, McCarthy and Bradley, Mlle. Martha, "Three French Girls" and Karl Kress will complete the bill.

Gloucester Trips.

Cape Ann at this season of the year is becoming popular, owing in part to the new hosts of people who are making its acquaintance by means of the Gloucester Bay steamers.

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

IT is budding time for country fairs. Rockingham Fair will blossom out in full tomorrow, with an extensive assortment of prize hogs, home-made canned squash, wild men from the Far East and a corps of sprightly diving girls fresh from the waterfront.

The country fair of today plays no favorites—if you prefer hogs and hens you will not be disappointed; if you yearn for diving girls, strong men and the African village your investment at the gate will fill your eyes to the limit and crowd your heart with positive gladness.

In any case you win.

Loyal followers of the modern country fair know that it is an agricultural institution made up considerably of passionate vaudeville and plain clothes men—the latter lending useful service to those whose projects are within easy reach of deft and well trained fingers. The public is amply protected while its money lasts, after that it doesn't make as much difference.

But Rockingham Fair—starts a new institution. It IS agricultural. I have Richard Pattee's word for it, and he ought to know, because somebody pays him to be manager of the agricultural and live stock departments. Besides, he's agricultural himself, being none other than Sullivan Prince of Noble Grand or something like that, of the State Grange.

"What makes a fair?" Mr. Pattee repeated my question, and then he answered it. "Why, the agricultural department, of course. The purpose and policy of a well regulated fair is to demonstrate the resources and possibilities of a locality, or a system of farming and breeding. It is a concentrated movement to develop and stimulate actual farmers by showing what can be done."

I pointed to the Midway. 'Twas only two days before the fair, but it was alive with midgets and giants, two-headed sheep and a tattooed woman.

"What do they demonstrate?" I asked.

Mr. Pattee was plainly disgusted, as any sane agriculturalist should have been. But he had an answer.

"They demonstrate the old saying about the fool and his money," he replied, turning his back upon the exhibition.

In spite of its glaring Midway Rockingham Fair will be agricultural to the core. It's promoters have insisted upon that.

But it will boast of its Midway, just the same. Even Eugene E. Reed, president of the fair association, former Mayor of Manchester, N. H., and hoping-to-be next congressman from his district, cast friendly eyes upon the arriving performers—who were plainly not agricultural. Of course, the cattle exhibit and the splendid horses of the grand circuit were all right, but it must be conceded that not even in New Hampshire do such quadrupeds have votes, and votes are what Mr. Reed expects to collect in November.

"Look at the bearded lady," he began, drawing my attention to that particular curiosity. "Do you know, I discovered this morning that he lives in my district and the Wild Man, although keeping his family in Lowell, really votes in Epping. I believe I will begin my campaigning right here."

"Why not go after the African village?" I suggested; "there's fifty able bodied men in that group."

But it was a cold subject with Mr Reed. He had been told that every savage in the exhibit was a citizen of Michigan.

We watched the Wild Man in his cage, debating between ourselves upon the safest method of approach. He looked more like a Progressive than a Democrat, and Mr. Reed wished to avoid mistakes.

A stranger stopped at the entrance and asked for the manager of the show. "He's inside—in the cage," said the doorkeeper.

"Well," said the stranger, "I want to book this show for a fair in Lincoln, Me. What's your terms?"

"You'll have to talk to Mr. Simpson—he's inside—in the cage. He's wild, for he owns the show."

Mr. Simpson, the Wild Man, received the offer and turned it down.

"Nothing doing," was his answer to the invitation to play the Lincoln fair for $50 a week.

"It's no use," went on the Wild Man, digging his toes into the straw that covered the bottom of the cage and leaning against the bars; "call it the high cost of living or whatever you want, but I just cannot afford to be wild for less than $75 a week. Why, I have a wife and eight children in Lowell and my oldest boy goes to Harvard this Fall. I've got to live, y' know."

"The Wild Man's son ought to make a good and regular freshman," suggested Mr. Reed. It would seem so.

The Wild Man appeared to be in demand, for his gateman brought him the news of another caller. "Show the gentleman in," he ordered, throwing a handful of hay over his head.

This visitor, we learned afterwards, was J. Adoniram Hewes of Melrose, who proposed to give the Wild Man a pair of patent suspenders in exchange for a testimonial. "It's something new," explained Adoniram, "and I'm almost willing to guarantee that they'll keep you wild as long as you wear them."

The Wild Man, being thrifty as well as ferocious, gathered the free suspenders and dictated a glowing testimonial to his stenographer, who had been in hiding behind the cage. "I can wear 'em Sundays, anyway," was all he said.

Our chat with the Wild Man brought out the information that this has been a bad season in his line. "I suppose it may be attributed to the presidential election—I remember we had hard going four years ago."

Mr. Reed whispered something through the bars. The Wild Man did not resent it. "Oh, I'm a Roosevelt man," he explained, "but I'm willing to listen to any argument. "Yes, I vote in Epping.

Mr. Moynahan's impressions of the preparations for the big show at Rockingham Park Fair.

"I think I've landed him," and Reed smiled significantly.

The Rockingham Fair Midway is a gorgeous collection of the world's queerest people—a monument to James F. Kerr, who made the collection, and to James Anthony Murphy, who, it may be said, made the Wild Man jealous.

It was Murphy who threatened to play the wild man's role if the latter didn't reduce his price to the amount offered by Mr. Murphy. The Wild Man was taking no chances with amateurs, and while he frosty and frankly expressed his utter lack of regard for Mr. Murphy, he accepted the terms.

"The professional jealously of these artists," explained Mr. Murphy, "kills all the joy of dealing with them. If you look sharp you will see former wild man for any fair."

As if the promoters felt that spice was needed to hold the interest of the neighboring farmer folk, a chorus of alluring diving girls will at regular intervals exhibit their charms and their skill. Every rural eye will be fixed on the big tank tomorrow.

Those who visit Rockingham Fair this week will find the solid men of New Hampshire strutting through the grounds. If, you look sharp you will see former Governor Charles M. Floyd, with a director's badge pinned to his coat, examining the horses—perhaps on the Midway. Added to the important visitors will be 50,000 or so of less unimportant people, who are expected to make the fair the biggest event of its kind ever held in New England.

A glance at the program shows that Rockingham Fair is not merely a big display of out-door vaudeville and curiosities. As Mr. Pattee had said, it is agricultural to the outside limit. The Grand Circuit races, which will be held daily will keep Wilbur L. Dantley at work on a strictly non-union schedule, and Dr. A. H. Fitts, who is looking after the horse show, will attend constantly to the business of making his end of the fair as attractive as the other departments.

Rockingham Fair will be no enormous dime museum. It will be a country fair in every particular—from corn to cows.

But that shouldn't keep you off the Midway, where J. Adoniram Hewes will sell his patent suspenders, and where Tony Murphy expects to keep the Wild Man jealous for six days. His job depends on it.
